

MIRATI SIKANDARI

OR

TRANSLATED BY

FAZLULLAH LUTFULLAH FARIDI.

PRINTED AT THE EDUCATION SOCIETY'S PRESS,

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF

HIS HIGHNESS MAHARAJA DHIRAJ MOHAN DEVAJI BAHADUR

RAJA SAHIB

OF

DHARAMPUR.

TO

HIS HIGHNESS MAHARAJA DHIRAJ MOHAN

DEVAJI BAHADUR,

To whose princely patronage and Royal Munificence this work owes its existence, it is most respectfully and gratefully

Dedicated.

PREFACE.

I had the honour in the year 1889 of obtaining several interviews with Colonel J. W. Watson, then Political Agent, Kathiáwáda, in connection with a certain account I had written which was noticed by him with approval. In the course of a conversation on Persian Histories of Gujarát the accomplished Colonel expressed regret at the incompleteness of the English translations of the two works on the history of Gujarát by indigenous writers—the Shirází Ahmedi and the Mirátí Sikandari. The valuable translation of the Ahmedi by Dr. Bird was, he said, not complete. In the same way, he observed, Sir Edward Clive Bayley's translation of the Sikandari broke off somewhat abruptly at the end of the reign of Sultán Mehmúd III, omitting unhappily the record of the eventful period that ushered in the Moghal sovereignty. Many of the numerous anecdotes that form the most attractive features of the "Mirror" of the genial Sikandar, were, he added, omitted. Colonel Watson said he was thinking of writing another translation, but want of time and failing health had come in his way. He advised, nay, asked me to translate the work, offering me all the help in his power. Such a kind hint from the accomplished scholar was tantamount to a command, and I undertook the work with pleasure. To my great regret he, who can be said to have been the father of the undertaking, did not live to see its completion. It is, however, a source at least of some satisfaction to me that some of the earlier chapters of the translation met his approval.

The proofs of this translation have been read by A. M. T. Jackson, Esquire, I. C. S., M. A., to whom, and to Sir James Campbell my very respectful thanks are due for much help and many improvements. My ability for its publication I owe solely to the kind and friendly efforts of Mr. Anopchand Jagjivandás Modi, B.A., LL.B., Sar Nyáyadish, Rajkot, and the munificence of His Highness Mahárája Mohan Devaji Rája Sáhíb of Dharampúr.

MIR-ĀTĪ SĪKANDARĪ.

THE first among the ancestors of the Sultāns of Gujarāt who became qualified with the honour and distinction of Islām was one Sahāran the Tānk.¹ He was styled Wajīh-ul-mulk, when he became a Muhammadan. "Tānk" means expelled from caste. The Tānks were expelled from caste for wine-drinking. Sahāran was the son of Harchand who was the son of Harpāl who was the son of Kandrapāl, son of Harpāl son of Dharbhlandar son of Kuivarpāl son of Darīman son of Darsāp son of Kunvar son of Trilok son of Sālāhan son of Mūlhan son of Manān son of Bhārāt son of Pagan son of Dūlha son of Māhsu son of Nāhsu and thus step by step to Rāmachandra whom the Hindus worship as God. Zafar Khān son of Wajīh-ul-mulk was the first of them who sat on the viceregal throne of Gujarāt, and the first who sat on the throne of the Sultānate of this country was Sultān Muhammad Shāh son of Zafar Khān called Tātār Khān.

It is related that Sultān Firūz Shāh, the uncle's son of Sultān Muhammad Tughlak Shāh, the king of Delhi, was very fond of hunting. He loved sport perhaps to an extent to which few of his predecessors or successors on the throne of Delhi have done. In fact he is accounted a patron saint of the sport, and people engaging in the pursuit address prayers for success to him. One day before his ascending the throne of Delhi he set out for hunting, and, in the pursuit of a deer, became separated from the body of his followers. At sunset, realizing the difficulty of his position, he began to look out for some place to pass the night in, and saw one of the villages of the Tāluka of Thānesar.² He turned the head of his horse towards it ; when he reached it, he saw a number of cultivators sitting outside of the gate. Alighting, he joined them, and asked one of them to pull off his long hunting boots. This man happened to be well versed in the art of physiognomy and palmistry. He happened to glance at the sole of the prince's feet, and he read the lines as indicative of future greatness. He told his companions that the stranger was either a king or a person who would shortly attain to that dignity.

¹ The Bombay Gazetteer History of Gujarāt calls the Tānks a class of Rajpūts claiming to be of the Surya-Vausi race, who, together with the Gūjars, appear from very early times to have inhabited the plains of the Panjāb.

² In the Sindh division of the Panjāb.

This man was one of two brothers Sádhu and Saháran. They were men of consequence and influence in the town and had much of its management in their hands. They could at a call summon thousands of horse and foot. Both of them kissed the ground before the prince and said, "If the prince is pleased to favour us by accepting our hospitality, it will be a great honour." The prince accepted their offers, and they did their best to give him satisfaction. The wife of Sádhu was a sensible woman. She proposed that although appearances were in favour of the greatness and exalted position of the distinguished stranger, it would be better not to place perfect confidence in him before testing his nobility of soul by the introduction of wine into the entertainment, for wine opens the heart and brings forth the qualities of him who drinks it. Sádhu's sister, who was as accomplished as she was beautiful, filled a cup, and handed it to the prince, who, with great good pleasure, took the cup, and quaffed it. This made the prince unbend and made him social and agreeable to an extent which permitted of the adroit wife of Sádhu plying him with judicious questions from all sides, with the result of by degrees worming out of him all his circumstances. When the prince showed an inclination towards the fair damsel, the wife of Sádhu consented to give her to him in marriage provided he informed her of all relating to himself.

The prince said his name was Firúz Khán, that he was the uncle's son of Sultán Muhammad the son of Tughlak Sháh. That the Sultán had made him his heir-apparent. On the wife of Sádhu giving this information to her husband, he gave his consent readily to the marriage which was forthwith contracted. When the happy husband of this charming young beauty got up in the morning, all his people assembled from all sides and he made ready to depart towards the capital. The brothers Sádhu and Saháran both attached themselves to the suite of the Sultán and followed in his retinue. They made themselves so useful to the prince that they seldom left his presence. The prince also loved his young bride greatly. Eventually the brothers both of them became converted to Islam, and Saháran received the title of Wajih-ul-mulk from Sultán Firúz, and both brothers shortly after became the spiritual followers of the great Saint Hazrat Makhdúm Jehánián. The Sultán also, day by day, conferred greater favours upon them.

One day it so happened that in the abbey or residence of the Saint Makhdúm Jehánián, a great crowd of people had collected, but there was no food to feed them. This information reached Muzaffar Khán, the son of Wajih-ul-mulk. He was a spiritual follower of the saint. He got up at once and sent a large quantity of food and sweets to the shrine and placed it before the derwishes, who were so pleased with the savory viands that (by way of grace) they yelled out such a loud and hearty 'tekhir' "Alláho-Akbar" (God is Great) that it reached the ears of the saint inside, who thereupon enquired what it meant. The servants explained. The saint sent for the donor Muzaffar Khán, who, coming, kissed the ground before him. The saint said: "Oh! Muzaffar Khán, the return for this feeding of my derwishes is the kingdom of the whole of Gujarát which in reward of this handsome deed, I grant thee, May it be auspicious to thee!" Saying this the saint presented him with a bed-cover which was then in his actual use. Muzaffar brought his forehead to the ground and made obeisance. Returning home happy and joyous he recounted his adventure to his wife, a woman of sharp wit and solid sense. She heard his account with pleasure, but said: "thou art now verging on old age—if thou attainest to the rule of Gujarát—how long wilt thou reign? So hie back to the presence of the saint and tell him to pray that the kingdom may continue in thy family for generations. To-day the sun of the kindness of the saint hath dawned on thee, and I doubt not, but that whatever request thou makest shall be complied with." Muzaffar Khán went forth with delicate perfumes, sweet smelling flowers, delicious fruits, and pretty betel-leaves and placed them before the holy man, who pleased at this elegant tribute, said: "Thou hast brought us perfumes!" He gave a handful of dates from out of the tray presented by Muzaffar to him, saying:—"According to the number of these dates, shall thy children rule over Gujarát!" Some say the number of dates was twelve or thirteen; others that it was not of battle and named Jítprí or town of Victory. This village, so founded, still exists.

Then in A. H. 795 (A. C. 1393) Zafar Khán moved towards Cambay and subdued all the country of Gujarát, then under Musalmán rule. In the year 796 A. H. (A. C. 1394) Sultán Muhammad, son of Firúz Sháh, died. He reigned six years and seven months. In Rabí-ul-awwal of the same year Humáyún Khán, the eldest son of Sultán Muhammad, mounted the throne under the title of Sultán Ala-ud-din. He reigned for six weeks and a day and died. After that, on the 20th of Jamádíl Awwal, Mehmúd Khán, the younger brother of the above-mentioned prince, mounted the throne, under the title of Násir-ud-dín Sháh. Shortly after, news reached Zafar Khán that the Rájá of Idar had rebelled. He was appointed with an army to subdue the rising. He besieged the fort and sent armed men on all sides to plunder and harrass the people of the rebel Rájá. In the end the Rájá made due submission. The Khán returned and thought of sacking and plundering Somnáth, when news reached him that Malik Násir alias A'díl Khan, the ruler of Asírgarh and Burhánpúr, was transgressing the limits of duty and allegiance and encroaching on Sultánpúr Nazarbár, a dependency of Gujarat. Zafar Khán immediately on hearing this reached the place by forced marches, and when A'díl Khan heard it, he turned back and went to Asír, and the Khán also returned to Anhilwára or Pattan.

In A. H. 797 (A. C. 1394) Zafar Khan marched against Jahrand (Júnágadh) in the country of Rái Bhára, and defeated the infidels of those parts, and then marched against Somnath, which temple he cast down and introduced Islám in the city of (Somnáth) Pattan.

In the next year (A. C. 1395) information reached him that the infidels of Mándu annoyed the Moslims. He marched against them, and though unable to take the fort of Mándú, he subdued the Rájá after a year's siege. Thence he performed a pilgrimage to Ajmer, walking the distance. From Ajmer he went to Sámbar and Dándwána, and subdued the infidels of these parts. He thence marched against the infidels of Delwara and Jalwárah,¹ whom punishing, he returned to Pattan.

The author of the history of Mehmúd Sháh has related that after the death of Mohammed, the son of Firúz Sháh, there was great disturbance in the kingdom of Delhi. Every noble entertained hopes of the purple. After a long while, when the rule of Delhi came into the hands of Mallu Ikbál Khán, Tátár Khán, the son of Zafar Khán, was in Pánipat. Ikbál Khán marched towards Pánipat to attack Tátár Khán, who, leaving his baggage in the fort of Panipat, went with an army to besiege Delhi. On the third day Ikbál Khán took the fort of Pánipat and captured the whole of Tátár Khán's baggage. In consequence of this, Tátár Khán, being unable to remain in that country, turned his face towards Gujarát, intending to raise an army in that country and return to oppose Ikbál Khán.

¹ By Jalwárah the historian means the modern principality of Jhaláwad in Kathiáwar. Delwara is Mount Abú.

In the meanwhile it came to Tátár Khán's ears that Mirza Moham. med Moghal, ¹ having brought an army out to India by the command of Amír Timúr Gúrgán (Tamerlane), was in Multán besieging Sárang Khán, the brother of Ikbál Khán. Thus the intention of marching against Delhi which had nearly taken the form of determination was postponed.

In A. H. 800 (A. C. 1397-98) Zafar Khán marched against Ídar to chastise the infidels. He besieged the fort and plundered the district; his intention being not to leave the district till he had wholly subdued it, but ~~on account of~~ ^{on account of} Timúr's conquests he concluded peace with the Ídar Rájá and returned to Pattan. In A. H. 801 (A. C. 1398-99) the Somnát infidels made incursions into the Musalmán possessions and began to affect independence. Zafar Khán led an army against them and subdued them and established Islám on a firm basis in their country. In this year Mahmúd, the son of Muhammad, the son of Sultán Fírúz Tughlak flying from the power of Timúr, came to Pattan but not obtaining armed aid from Zafar Khán, went to Málwa to Alp Khán. There also he received no aid and went to Kannouj and contented himself with that domain.

SULTÁN MUHAMMAD, OTHERWISE CALLED TÁTÁR KHÁN, SITS ON THE THRONE OF GUJARÁT.

During the unsettled times that followed the Mughal conquest at Delhi, Tátár Khán was always praying of his father Zafar Khán to march against Delhi, but Zafar Khán was always cooling his ardeur by objecting, on the ground that such action would be reproved as venially avaricious. At last in A. H. 806 (A. C. 1403) Zafar Khán invested Tátár Khán with the sovereignty and title of Násirudin Muhammad Sháh, and having handed over to him the treasure, elephants, horses, &c., himself repaired to Asáwal, which city Muhammad Sháh made his capital. In the same week in which he assumed royalty, he left Asáwal on a religious war, and, after humbling the infidels of Nádot, who resided in a mountainous country and did not acknowledge the sovereignty of the Sultáns of Gujarát, he marched against Delhi. Ikbál Khán was alarmed at hearing his intentions, but Muhammed Sháh being suddenly taken ill, died, and his body was brought to Pattan,¹ where he was buried.

¹ Feristah (II. 355) calls this prince Mirza Pir Muhammad, the grandson of Timúr.

But the people of Gujarat say that Tatár Khán, with the desire of mounting the throne, at the instigation of evil counsellors, imprisoned his father Zafar Khán, and caused himself to be proclaimed king by the style and title of Muhammad Sháh. When he set out for Delhi, persons, friendly to Zafar Khán, poisoned him. The title "the Martyred Lord" that he was given after his death also points out to the fact that he did not die a natural death.

It is said that the late Sultán was a spiritual follower of the Makhdum Jahánián. It is related that when Sultán Muhammad sent a large sum of money to the Saint Ganj-Bakhsh (the saint who lies enshrined at Sarkhez), and begged of him to pray for the permanence of his kingdom, the saint rejected the offer, and returned word that the money did not of a right belong to him but to his master, and that he had no right to spend it in any way.

When Muhammad Sháh bade adieu to life, Zafar Khán again ascended the throne. The nobles gave him obedience, and he, on his part, tried to obtain their love, and returned to his capital. It is related that from that day to the end of his life his eyes were never tearless, and he often wished to give over his kingdom to his younger brother Shams Khán and retire from public life, but, owing to the refusal of the latter, could not obtain his wish. At last he sent Shams Khán to Nágór and ordered him to take over the rule of that place from Jalál Khán Khokhar. He made Ahmed Khán, the son of his son Sultán Muhammad, his heir-apparent and educated him.

On the 17th of the month of Ramazán A. H. 807 (A. C. 1404) it came to hearing that Amír Timúr was dead and that Ikbál Khán had invaded Kanouj with the intention of wresting that province from the hands of Sultán Mahmūd, the grandson of Sultán Fírúz, who had of late contented himself with the piece of territory consisting of Kanouj. Sultán Mahmud entrenched himself within the castle of Kanouj and Ikbál Khán returned to Delhi after some unavailing attempts to reduce the place. In A. H. 808 (A. C. 1405) Zafar Khán prepared an army to go to help Mahmud Sháh. In the meanwhile, however, it came to hearing that in the Jamádíl-awwal¹ of the same year there was a battle between Ikbál Khán and Khizr Khán, that Khizr Khan was successful and that Ikbál Khán was killed. Zafar Khán now abandoned his expedition, as Khizr Khán was now established on the throne of his forefathers.

¹ Though the author's meaning is vague, it seems that Muhammad Sháh died at some other place and his body was brought to Pattan where it was interred.

ZAFAR KHÁN MOUNTS THE THRONE WITH THE TITLE OF SULTÁN MUZAFFAR.

A. H. 810 (A. C. 1407).

Three years after the death of Sultan Muhammed Sháh, in consequence of the representations of his nobles, that as the Tughlak dynasty to which he owed fealty was no more, Zafar Khán took to himself the title and insignia of royalty in Bírúpúr in the year A. H. 810 (A. C. 1407). He proceeded towards Dhár in Málwa to ask Alp Khán, son of Diláwar Khán, to enter into his allegiance, or failing that to leave the country. Alp Khán, however, opposed him, and being defeated in battle betook himself to the castle of Dhár, which was besieged by the Sultán. Finally, however, Dhár was reduced and Alp Khán surrendered himself and was placed in confinement under the charge of Nasrat Khán. About this time news was received that Sultán Ibráhím of Jaunpúr had marched to Kanouj with a view of plundering the Delhi territories. Muzaffar Sháh marched to the assistance of Sultán Mahmūd, son of Sultán Muhammad, Lord of Delhi. On hearing of this Sultán Ibráhím returned to Jaunpúr, and Sultán Muzaffar also on hearing of this returned to his capital. Alp Khán remained a year in prison, when Músa Khán, one of Alp Khán's kinsmen, usurping his authority, Alp Khán begged to be released, and the Sultán consenting, sent his grandson Ahmed Khán with an army to reinstate him. Having done this, Ahmed Khán marched to Mándu, Músa Khán fled, and Ahmed Khán returned to Gujarát.

¹ The fifth month of the Arab Calendar.

In A. H. 812 (A. C. 1409) the Sultán attacked the infidels of Kanbh Kōt.¹ He asked aid of Sheikh Kásim, a saint. The holy man having glanced over the list of the army drew lines through the names of certain persons who, he said, would be killed. As it happened, the prophesy of the saint proved true.

Sultán Muzaffar Sháh died in the latter part of the month of Safar² in the year A. H. 813 (A. C. 1410). Though the historians are silent as to it, the cause of Sultán Muzaffar's death is so related:—The Kolis of the village of Asáwal, having thrown off their allegiance, took to brigandage and highway robbery. Muzaffar sent Ahmed Khán to subdue them with an army that was present at the capital. The prince encamped at Khán Sarovar, and there calling before him a number of the great Doctors of Law, asked them whether a person whose father was killed by another without reason, had over the murderer, the right of retaliation and blood. All the Doctors unanimously returned a verdict in the affirmative, and the prince taking care of the paper on which their opinions were written, suddenly returned to the city the next day and imprisoned his grandfather and mixing poison in a bowl gave it to him to drink. The old Sultán said: "My son, why such a hurry? All that is mine would have, before long, come to thee without this violence!" But the young prince said: "Your time has come" according to the Koranic verse: "And when their hour cometh, they tarry not a moment, nor do they hasten." The Sultán then asked him to hear some advice from him. The first was, to kill the man who had set him to this act, or if not, at least never to trust him; next, to abstain from wine; third to kill Sheikh Malik and Shere Malik who were dangerous men. Sultán Muzaffar was buried within the city walls of Pattan. It is related that after his grandfather's death Ahmed Khán was often very remorseful and sorrowful and ever deplored an act that had been done by him in the rashness and heat of the prime of youth. Otherwise looking to the general virtuous tenor of his conduct this act was extremely repugnant to it.

SULTÁN AHMED SHÁH.

On the 14th of the holy month of Ramazán, A. H. 813 (A. C. 1410-11.) Ahmed Sháh, the son of Muhammad Sháh, the son of

¹ The Tabakáti Akbari has Kanth Kot, a dependency of Katch. This is probably correct.

² The second month of the Musalmán Calendar.

Muzaffar Sháh, ascended the throne of Gujarát. After some days information came that Moid-dud-dín Fírúz Khán, his cousin and ruler of Baroda, having made some nobles to side with him, wanted to dispute with him the sovereignty of Gujarát. His allies were Hi-sám-ul-mulk Bhandári and Malik Ahmed his son, and Malik Sháh, father of Khatri, and the son of the deceased Hasbul-Mulk, and Malik Kásim Khusráo, and Jívandás and Prágdás, who all met him at Nadiád and defeated Bhíkan Khán and Ádam Sultán Afghán Khán who were friends of the king. Jívandás Khatri then induced them to swerve from their allegiance, and assembling the Amirs proposed to attack Pattan, but the others refused; and on Jívandás reproaching them with cowardice a dispute arose, in which Jívandás was killed and the rest sought forgiveness from the king and were forgiven. Moid-dud-dín Fírúz Khán, however, went to Cambay where he was joined by, Sheikh Malik, called Masti Khán, son of Sultán Muzaffar Khán who was governor of Surat. When the Sultán marched against them they fled from Cambay to Broach, whither the Sultán pursued and besieged them. On the Sultán's arrival Moid-dud-dín's army went over to him and Masti Khán submitted to him, and after a few days Sultán Ahmed sent for and forgave Moid-dud-dín and returned triumphantly. On his return to Asáwal he determined to meet Ásá, the Bhíl, and with the advice of the Saint Khwájah Garfj-Bakhsh began to build Ahmedabad.

In the year A. H. 816 (A. C. 1413) the construction of the city walls began by the hands of four persons of the name of Ahmed. The first was the famous Saint Sheikh Ahmed Khatu; the second, Sultán Ahmed; the third, another Sheikh Ahmed of great sanctity, and the fourth, Mulla Ahmed. The royal palace was the first building to be constructed within the city; the Jámá Mosque near Mánék Chouk was begun in the Hijra year 817 (A. C. 1414). The date or the year of the building can be obtained from the numerical value of the word خَيْر (good).¹ The length of its southern court is a hundred gaz (a little less than a yard); the breadth of this court is 120 gaz. The breadth of the two northern and southern sides is 120 gaz. Deducting the Mulúk-khánah, or the Royal Retiring Chamber, there are 350 pillars, there being two pillars for the doorway of the royal portico. The royal raised portico is supported by 8 pillars. On the northern and southern sides, there are 212 pillars. There are 350 pillars within the mosque. And there are 8 domes without the south side, 77 large ones and 20 small. The minarets have 57 steps.

¹ The author of the Miráti Sikandari derives the date of the commencement of the construction of the city from the numerical value of the Arabic word Khair, (خير) good. Now, according to the Abjad account Kh being equal to 600 ey, = 10, r = 200 makes 810. But the author gives the year in one place as A. H. 813 (A. C. 1410) in another place A. H. 816 (A. C. 1413), whereas Ferishtah gives the year as A. H. 815 (A. C. 1412).

In A. H. 815 (A. C. 1412), Moid-dud-din Firúz Khán and Mast Khán joined Rája Ranmal of Ídar and took shelter in the Ídar fortress at the instigation of Badr-i-Ulá. Sultán Ahmed marched against them to Ídar, and sent Hoshang, called Fateh Khán, a cousin of Sultán Muzaffar, with an army to enter the Ídar country by way of Kherálu.

At this time Moid-ud-dín Khán won over to his side Ibráhím Khán, the son of Nizám, commonly known as Rukn Khán, who was Thánádár on behalf of the Sultán in the town of Morásá.¹ Badr-i-Ulá and Moid-ud-dín Khán and Masti Khán and Ranmal, the Rája of Idar, marched down having joined their forces to the village of Ránakpur (miswritten Rangpúr) under Ídar, about five miles from the town of Morásá, and began strongly to strengthen the fort of Morásá to dig a deep moat round it, and to place at each opening in the castle strong guns and mortars.

The Sultán also came out to the neighbourhood of Morásá and from natural kindness of heart and fear of God with an eye to mercy sent an emissary, advising the enemy to abstain from the evil ways of disaffection, which would lead surely to ruin, and to make submission and ask for pardon which was sure to be granted. The rebels, however, not giving ear, the Sultán laid siege to the castle, not however without repeating the peaceful advice. The rebels now, pretending to be effected by the Sultán's advice, said that they would submit to the Sultán, provided he sent Nizám-ul-mulk the Vazír, Saadul-mulk the commander of the right, and Malik Ahmed Azíz-ul-mulk and Nasír Seyf, called Bázdár Khán, to receive their submission and to lead them in safety to the Sultán, as their faults were many and great and they could not bring themselves to believe in such an easy pardon.

The Sultán gave the abovenamed nobles leave to enter the castle but to take care of the guile of the rebels. When the Amir abovenamed approached the castle, Badr-i-Ulá, having placed some armed and armoured men in ambuscade, advanced to meet them, and began to address them in such sweet and plausible words that he quit removed from their minds the fear of foul play, and asking Nizám-ul-mulk and Saádul-mulk to give him a minute apart, took them aside, when the armed men, rushing from their ambush, secured the two noblemen and took them inside the castle. Before entering it, however, Nizám-ul-mulk called out in a loud voice and told his other companions that whatever he was destined to suffer had passed, but that the Sultán should on no account, owing to his being taken, fall short of anything in the taking of the castle. The Sultán now ordered the castle to be taken by escalade, which was done on the third day of this event; the misguided rebels concealed themselves in the cells of the castle.

¹ Morásá, forty miles north-east of the town of Kaira.

At last in A. H. 814 (A. C. 1411-12) Badr-i-Ula and Rukn-Khán were killed, and Fíruz Khan and the Rájá of Ídar fled. Nizam-ul-mulk and Sāād-ul-mulk were released from prison in safety. The Rájá seeing what had happened, and thinking that his safety lay in it, surrendered to the king the elephants and horses and baggage of Moid-ud-dín, Fíruz Khán, and Masti Khán, and plundered their camp. Moid-ud-dín and Masti Khán fled to Nágore where they took shelter with Shams Khán Dandani, so called from his teeth being long. Moid-ud-dín was eventually slain in the war between Rána Mokal and Shams Khán. On account of the Ídar Rájá acting thus submissively, the king forgave his offence, and having levied the tribute agreed on, departed.

After this, in A. H. 816 (A. C. 1414-1415), Usmán Ahmed Sarkhej and Sheikh Malik, son of Sher Malik, who resided in Pattan, and Ahmed Sher Malik, and Sulimán Afgán, called Ázím Khán, and Ísá Sálár rebelling, wrote secret letters to Sultán Hoshang of Málwá that if he would march with the view of the conquest of Gujarát they would join him and seat him on the throne and expel Sultán Ahmed. To strengthen their cause they persuaded the Káthis and Sátarsál, Rájá of Jháláwár, to join them.

Sultán Ahmed sent Prince Latíf Khán his brother and Nizám-ul-mulk, against Sheikh Malik, and himself going to Bándhru in the parganá of Sánvli, ten kos from Chánpáner, encamped there, and sent Imád-ul-mulk against Sultán Hoshang. Sultán Hoshang afraid to risk a battle with Imád-ul-mulk, a slave of Sultán Ahmed's, said that if he was victorious over him he would only have the doubtful honour of beating a slave, but, victory being God-given, if he was defeated by Imád-ul-mulk he would have to bear the opprobrium of being routed by a slave. He therefore retired and Imād-ul-mulk after plundering Mālwa, returned.

Latif Khān and Nizām-ul-mulk, having repulsed Sheikh Malik and Sātarsāl, drove them into Sorath, which is a Tālukā of Mandlik Rājā of Girnār, and leaving the guilty persons to their guilt returned, and the Sultān also returned with joyful heart to Ahmedabād.

Be it known that Sultān Alā-ud-din first spread the light of Islām from Nehrwalā Pattan to the fort of Bharoch (Broach), but the rest of the country remained as it was, in darkness. The Gujarāt Sultāns by degrees enlightened the country, and the parts of the country that were thus enlightened through the exertions of Sultān Ahmed were as under.

THE EXPEDITION OF SULTĀN AHMED AGAINST SORATH, HIS ATTACK ON GIRNĀR AND HIS RETURN.

In A. H. 817 (A. C. 1415) Girnār, the famous rock-castle of Sorath, was attacked by Sultān Ahmed. Rāo Mandlik, the Rājā of Girnār, having prepared a strong army gave battle to the Sultān near the foot of the mountain. The van of the Muslim army broke the ranks and scattered the army of the Rāo, who, losing many men in the field, fled and took refuge on the top of the mountain. It is said that though the light of Islām was not brought to the perfection of its refulgence in this expedition, yet the infidels of the place from being militant¹ became tributary, and lost their independence, and the fort of Jūnāgadh, which is situated at the foot of the mountain, fell into the hand of the Sultān, and the greater part of the Zamindārs of Sorath became obedient and submissive and consented to service. The Sultān returned to Ahmedabād leaving Syad Abul Kheir and Syad Kāsim to collect the Zamindars' salāmi or tribute.

EXPEDITION AGAINST SIDHPUR. A. H. 818 (A. C. 1416).

In A. H. 818 (A. C. 1416), the Sultān attacked Sidhpūr² and broke the idols and the images in the big temple at that place and turned the temple into a mosque. When he satisfied himself with having brought to an end the expedition against Sidhpūr, he in

¹ The words used in the text are the legal Arabic terms Harbi and Zimmi, the first denoting an infidel engaged in active warfare, against a Musalmān power and the second paying tribute or tax to it. This was the Second destruction of the beautiful temple. It was first sacked and destroyed by Alā-ud-din Khilji (A. C. 1295-1315).

² On the river Sarasvati, fifty-eight miles north of Ahmedabād.

A. H. 819 (A. D. 1417) invaded Dhár. The reason of his having done so was that while the Sultán was going towards Sultánpur and Názarbár to repel an attack of Nasir, the son of Eynul-mulk, the ruler of Asirgar and Burhánpur, a Gujarát zamindár by name Púnjá, the Rájá of Idar, and Trinbakdass, Rájá of Chámpáner, Satarsál, the Rájá of Jháláwár, and Siri, Rájá of Nádót,¹ having agreed among themselves wrote to Sultán Hoshang of Mándu, telling him that Sultán Ahmed being absent, and engaged with Nasir Eynul-mulk, it was an opportunity for the invasion of Gujarát which they would help to render successful by their co-operation. Sultán Hoshang began to prepare an army, and wrote to Shams Khán Dandáni offering him the city of Pattan with its parganáas if he agreed to co-operate with him, if not, he stated, that for what had passed Sultán Ahmed was sure to visit upon him his vindictive displeasure. Shams Khán Dandáni, however, wrote to Sultán Ahmed setting forth the intention of Sultán Hoshang, and stating that he was not the man to play fast and loose with the fidelity that he owed to the Sultán who allowed him to rule over a corner of his dominions. The camel-rider of Shāms Khán conveyed this letter to the Sultán from Nágore² on the ninth day to Sultánpur,³ during which time it also reached the ear of the Sultán that Sultán Hoshang had crossed the boundaries of Gujarát and encamped near Morásá. The Sultán set forth for Gujarát by forced marches, and in spite of the rainy season reached the neighbourhood of Morásá on the seventh day and encamped opposite to Sultán Hoshang. Sultán Hoshang reproached the confederates for representing to him that the absence of Sultán Ahmed was to be of long duration, and saying that he had lost confidence in them, fled back during the night to Málwa, and the confederate Rájás dispersed regretful and crestfallen. Sultán Ahmed stayed a few days at Morásá, and receiving news that consequent on the incursion of Sultán Hoshang the zamindárs of Sorath refused to pay tribute, and also hearing that Nasir, the son of Ráje, the ruler of Asir, with the connivance of Gheirat Khán, son of Sultan Hoshang, had laid siege to the fort of Thálner, and by the treachery of Iftikhár-ul-mulk, son of the ruler of the fort, had taken possession of it, and with the aid of the zamindárs of Nádót had marched towards Sultánpur and Nazarbár and had organised a rebellion, Sultán Ahmed nominated Malik Mehmúd Barki and Mukh-lisul-mulk to subdue Nasír, and sent Kháni Aázam Mehmúd Khán with a strong army to chastise the Sorath rebels. When Malik Mehmúd Barki reached Nádot he plundered and laid waste its territories, and when he neared the town of Sultánpur, Gheirat Khán fled to Málwá and Nasír to Thálner, at which latter place he was besieged by the Malik and was so hard pressed that in a short time he submitted to the Sultán, asking forgiveness which the Sultán accorded with the title of Khán. After some time, to chastise the transgression that has been above related of Sultán Hoshang, Sultán Ahmed invaded Málwa. The Rójás, Punjá the son of Ranmal of Ídar, and Trimbakdass of Chánpáner, and the Rája of Nádot, who were the confederates of Sultán Hoshang in his late invasion of Gujarát, sent their agents in the presence of the Sultán to seek forgiveness, and the Sultán out of policy having pardoned them and having kept Malik Ziyá-ud-din, Nizám-ul-mulk, the Vazír, as Regent behind him, marched on towards Málwa, and after many consecutive marches arrived in the presence of Sultan Hoshang's army, who had by digging a deep moat, strongly entrenched his position in the neighbourhood of Ujjain. It is related that on the day of battle Sultán Ahmed Sháh, having prepared himself mounted his horse, and came to the tent of Faríd, the son of Imád-ul-mulk, and there pulling in rein, sent word to the Malik that he had conferred upon him the dress of honour and the title of Imád-ul-mulk that was enjoyed by his father. It so happened that at that particular time Faríd, preparatory to donning his armour, as was the wont in the warfare of those days, was rubbing oil on his body and had to send an apology to the Sultán instead of proceeding personally to join him. The Sultán went on his way and engaged the enemy. When Faríd reached that place, he found the way across the stream that ran between the hostile armies so blocked up by crowds of soldiers, that it was impossible for him to find the whereabouts of the Sultán. At last he called out if anybody could point out to him the way to the Sultán. A man came forward and said there was none except by taking a turn to the rear of the enemy. Dangerous as this was, Faríd said it was all that he desired (to retrieve, no doubt, his late slackness in answering the call of the Sultán) and readily asked the man to lead. When he had made the dangerous circuit, he found the hostile armies hotly engaged, the van with the van, the right wing with the right wing, the left with the left, and the centre of the Málwa Sultán was kept as reserve to await the turn of events; but the fate of the day was decided by the bold charge of Faríd who turned the trembling scale in favour of the Gujarát army; meanwhile the van of Sultán Hoshang was dispersed by the van of the Gajarát army, and however much he tried to stem the tide of defeat, he could not restrain his army from flight. The Málwa Sultán was thus utterly routed leaving in the field his elephants and treasure to be captured by the victorious Sultán Ahmed. Sultán Hoshang took refuge in the fort of Mándu, up to the very gates of which he was persued by the army of Sultán Ahmed, who, after staying a short time in the neighbourhood and appointing an army to lay waste the territories of Málwá, returned victorious on the first of Zil-kaad ¹ A. H. 821 (A. C. 1418) to his capital. In this year he marched to Chánpáner ² to chastise the Rájá Trimbakdass, but as the necessity of subduing and taking the territories and the fortress of Mándu was ever present before his mind he did not attempt the capture of the Chánpáner fortress, but after the waste and plunder of the territories and the levy of the fixed tribute, in the beginning of the month of Safar ³ of the same year he went to Bahádurpúr Sankhedá. ⁴ He plundered this country and carried away a large amount of booty, ~~and~~ having built mosques and introduced Islám and appointed Kázis, he built a wall round the town of Mángani under Sankhedá, and having left a garrison to take care of the place he drew his army towards the fortress of Mándu. When he reached Dhár, Sultán Hoshang sent Máuláná Músa and Ali Jámдар as ambassadors to crave pardon for his past conduct, and Sultán Ahmed accepted their excuses and marched to the fort of Chánpáner, and after plundering that country returned to Ahmedábád in A. H. 823 (A. C. 1421).

¹ This is Nándot, the chief town of Rájpipla in the Reva Kántha Agency.

² Nágore in the Rájputána State of Jodhpur, eighty-four miles north-west of Nasirábád.

³ Sultánpur now forming with Nandurbar, the western part of the Khándesh collectorate.

The latter part of this year Ahmed Sháh devoted to bringing his own dominions into thorough subjection, and wherever any one was headstrong he cast down his stronghold, and he overthrew temples and built mosques in their stead, and he also constructed fortified thánás, of which he first populated the fort of Chitor ⁵ in the pargana of Bárásinor and Dohad which is among the hills, and he repaired the

¹ The eleventh month of the Musalman calendar.

² In the British district of the Panch Mahals and from A. C. 1483 to A. C. 1560 the chief city of Gujarat, now in ruins.

³ The second Musalman month.

⁴ A town on the northern bank of the Or river in H. H. the Gaikwar's territories.

⁵ It cannot be determined whether this is Chitor or Jépúr.

fort of Kárehth which had been built by Alaf Khán Sanjar in the year A. H. 704 (A. C. 1304) during the reign of Sultán Alá-ud-din, and named it Sultánábád, Sultán Ahmed besieged the fort of Mesur. At this time Sultán Hoshang had gone to Jájnapur to hunt elephants. The garrison, therefore, hopeless of succour, surrendered the fort. Sultán Ahmed leaving a strong garrison at the place then besieged Mándu, but after a seige of eighteen days on the approach of the rainy season he raised the seige and went to Ujjain which city is the navel (centre) of Málwá. He again besieged Mándu, but Sultán Hoshang now returned from Jájnapur, entered the fort by the Tárápúr Gate and began to strengthen its position. Sultán Ahmed despairing of taking Mándu this time, marched for Sárangpur which he besieged. Sultán Hoshang now sent ambassadors to him and peace was concluded.

On the night of the twelfth of Muharram, (the first Mussalman month,) A. H. 826 (A. D. 1422) Sultán Hoshang surprised the incautious army of Sultán Ahmed during the night. For sometime the uproar was considered as caused by the breaking loose of a mad elephant, till Malik Munir, aroused the Sultán, who mounted a kettle-drum horse, every one of his suite having horsed himself as best he could, and showed himself to the army. The first charge of Hoshang was directed on a number of Garásyás and Rajpúts who had encamped on the left, and a hundred of whom were killed in the first onset. Next they attacked another portion of the camp and killed many. Sultán Ahmed told Malik Khúban his equery to try and bring him information about Faríd Sultáni and Malik Muqarrab. Malik Khúban galloped away and saw both these nobles ready mounted and on their way to the royal tent. He informed them of the position, of the Sultán, and they, each of them, with a thousand horsemen, appeared before the Sultán, who in the height of his anger at this mishap reproached them grossly for their being more neglectful than himself. They asked the Sultán's permission to be allowed to attack Hoshang, but the Sultán very wisely restrained their ardour till daylight. The Sultán now ordered Malik Khúban to bring him further information, which he did, to the effect that Sultán Hoshang, fancying himself the master of the field, was standing near the royal tent of Sultán Ahmed and inspecting the horses and elephants which were being paraded before him. When the morning began to dawn Sultán Ahmed with his lion-like nobles and soldiers fell on the Málwá army. It was such a hotly contested field that both the Sultáns engaged personally in it till they were wounded. At last the elephant-drivers of Sultan Ahmed who were with the Málwá army took the opportunity of attacking Sultán Hoshang who, unable to oppose the force of their attack, turned his face and fled, and victory crowned the brow of Sultán Ahmed. So completely were the tables turned that the army of Sultán Hoshang left in the field the property of the Gujarát camp they had lately plundered in their hurry to escape with bare life. Sultán Ahmed rendered up prayers of thanksgiving for his dearly bought victory, and Sultán Hoshang with his broken army took shelter in the fort of Sárangpár. Sultán Ahmed now returned to Gujarát, but halted midway when he heard Sultán Hoshang was picking himself up for one last effort to wipe out the shame of all his disasters. Sultán Hoshang approached suddenly and both the armies joined battle. They say that in this field Sultán Hoshang left four thousand men dead, and that a number of elephants of tremendous size and strength fell into Sultán Ahmed's hands. Sultán Ahmed returned victorious to Ahmedábád in A. H. 826 (A. C. 1422-23).

It is related that two months before this event Sultán Ahmed had written to Sheikh Ahmed Khattú, relating all the events of that time and expressing a fear that he would still for some time be detained in Málwá; the Sheikh in reply foretold the exact date on which the Sultán would return to Ahmedábád, saying "you shall in triumph and success return to your capital, God willing, in the year 826" and this date eventually fell true. How august the period which was graced by men with such purity of soul as the Saint Ahmed and the Saint Syad Burhánud-dín and his sons Sháh Alam and others, each of them qualified with such brilliant virtues.

For three years after this Sultán Ahmed remained peaceably at Ahmedábád.

In A. H. 829 (A. C. 1425) an army was sent against Ídar, and the Rájá fled to the hills and his country was plundered and laid waste. In A. H. 830 (A. C. 1425) Sultán Ahmed founded a city on the bank of the river Háthmati, eighteen miles from Ídar, and on the frontier, of Gujarát, and constructed a strong stonewall around it. He named it Ahmednagar¹ and proposed to pass much of his time in it. In A. H. 831 (A. C. 1427) the Sultán having sent out some men for bringing in hay, Púnjá, Rájá of Ídar, attacked the party and took away an elephant, but the party again collecting pursued Púnjá who made a stand at a place where there is a rock on one side and a deep chasm on the other, and the path along which does not admit of more than one horseman passing along it. The royal elephant-driver, pushed his elephant on, against the Rájá who was on horseback. The Rájá's horse taking fright, leaped into the chasm, destroying itself and its rider, and Púnjá, Rájá of Ídar, was never heard of again. The second day after the event a wood-cutter brought to the royal Darbár the head of Púnjá. The Sultán asked if anybody knew Púnjá and one of his followers who had for a short time served Púnjá came forth and recognising the features of his late master, said :—" Ay, this is the face of the Raoji !"¹ Those present in the Darbár reproached the man for naming an infidel so respectfully, but the Sultán stopped them and added that the man was right in remembering his old master with love and respect. After this for two years the Sultán remained in his own country and brought it into subjection and did not attack any foreign land, and made laws for his army and the administration of his kingdom. He also settled the emoluments of the military in this manner that half the pay of the soldiers should be defrayed by grants of land and half by money ; because, if the pay were fixed to be all in money it would not be lasting and the soldiers would be badly equipped and careless in protecting the country ; but if half their pay were given by a grant of land (jágir) from that grant they would obtain grass, firewood, milk, and butter-milk, and if they engaged in agriculture and building houses they would derive profit and would strive to protect the country with their heart and life. He also ordered that they should receive the money portion of their pay monthly without delay or hindrance, wherever they may be posted so that, wherever they might be, they would have always to be present, at their posts and if on any occasion they should be called on active service they would not be obliged to borrow money whether the expedition be a distant or a near one. It was also possible that on a distant expedition the income from the jágir would not reach the soldiers on account of the roads being closed in time of war, when they would draw the half share of their pay in money from the Royal Treasury, or in case of the want of weapons of war they should not be in difficulties and obliged to borrow money, and would not be anxious on account of their families as they would be maintained from the produce of their jágirs. It was also ordered that the treasurer should be one of the royal slaves while the paymaster was a free man in order that they may not combine and stretch forward the hand of treachery and peculation. The same arrangements were made with regard to the Amils or revenue officers of the districts. These arrangements lasted intact till the time of Sultán Muzaffar, the son of Sultán Mahmúd Begdá. In the time of Sultán Bahádur when a large number of foreigners joined the Gujarát army, economical administrators on taking account of the revenues of the kingdom found that they had in some Maháls got up from one to ten, others from one to nine or eight or seven; but in no case was the increase less than double. After that changes and innovations were introduced and rules and regulations all laid aside. Abuses crept in and great disturbances arose as shall be mentioned in their proper place.

¹ It now belongs to the Native State of Ídar.

¹ The expletive 'ji' is added to the name or designation of a person in respectful or polite mode of address, as 'Ráo'—or Chief—and 'Raoji, Diván, and Divanji. My Lord, or my dear Lord the Rao, and my dear Lord the minister. Instance Akbar calling his dying friend Faizi "Sheikhji ! will you not speak to me" ? Blochmann's, Ain-i-Akbari.

In A. H. 835 (A. C. 1431) news was received that Sultán Fírúz Bahmani, King of the Dakhan, had marched against the infidels of Bijánagar and had been defeated by them. Sultán Ahmed sent a large army to his assistance, as there was great and sincere friendship between them. When, however, the army reached the fort of Nándar,¹ Sultán Fírúz Bahmani was reported dead and was succeeded by his son Sultán Ahmed Bahmani who sent rich presents to Sultán Ahmed Gujaráti, and his army returned.

After that from the year A. H. 836 (A. C. 1432) to A. H. 845 (A. C. 1441) every year the Sultán used to send armies for the chastisement or correction of some Rájá or king. Some time it was to ravage the country of Ídar. Sometimes to awaken Nasír of Asírgadh to a sense of his position and duty. Sometimes to chastise Sultán Ahmed Bahmani, and sometimes to pillage Meywár. Sometimes he used to go out himself at the head of the army, but his armies always returned victorious. Never during the whole term of his reign was defeat met with by the Gujarát army.

At last in A. H. 845² (A. D. 1443) the messenger of death overtook Sultán Ahmed at Ahmedábád, and he was buried in the mausoleum at Mánek Chauk in that city. May God have mercy on him.

¹ This is probably Rándar on the northern bank of the Tapti near Surat. Sir Edward Olive Bayley calls it Thál-nér but is doubtful as to its correctness. See Bayley's Gujarat 114.

² The Miráti Sikandari omits the events of A. C. 1442-43, the flight of Kánha, Rájah of Jháláwar to Khándesh and the help given to him by Ahmed Bahmani. The reprisals by the Gujarát Sultán, the sending of his son with a large army and the defeat of the Dakhnis. Then follows the quarrel about the Island of Mahaim (Mahim) and Malik-ut-Tujjar's defeat. See Farishtah (Pers. txt.) II. 369.

Sultán Ahmed was born on the nineteenth of Zil-hajj A. H. 793 (18th November A. C. 1391). It was in the twentieth year of his life that he mounted the throne, and he reigned thirty-two years, six months and twenty-two days, having lived fifty-two years and some months. It is said that from the time he reached the age of maturity to his death Sultán Ahmed never missed his morning prayer. He was the spiritual follower of Sheikh Rukn-ud-din Kán-i-Shakar, a grandson of Sheikh Farid-ud-din Ganj-i-Shakar, who lies enshrined in the city of Pattan in Gujarát. Sultán Ahmed had also great belief in Sheikh Ahmed Khattu, for whom he used to take a pride in performing even menial offices. Once on a dark night the Sheikh asked for a clod of earth for ceremonial purification and the Sultán handing him one, the Sheikh asked whether it was Saláhud-din (the Sheikh's servant). The Sultán answered—"No-'tis I." "Oh! the Virtuous Sultán!" exclaimed the Sheikh. And the Sheikh thenceforth always used to style him "Sultán Virtuous." The Sultán made his son a spiritual follower of the Sheikh. For virtue and probity and liberality the Sultán had no peer, and he ever strived in religious war.

Of his justice, it is related that having a son-in-law who from arrogance of youth, greatness, and close connection with the Sultán murdered an innocent person. The Sultán coming to know of this, ordered the young man to be sent before the Kázi and secured like a common criminal. The Kázi compromised the case with the relatives of the murdered man for a money compensation in shape of two hundred camels. But the Sultán said that though the relatives of the dead man were satisfied with taking a price for blood, that he was not content with this sentence, which, lest others in power might be inclined to follow the example of the young man, should have been capital. In this case said the Sultán retaliation must take the place of blood fine. And he ordered the young man to be crucified in the midst of the market place, where after paying the penalty of his life he was buried the next day. The example of this summary justice of the Sultán was enough to restrain his other nobles and connections from acts of violence towards the poor. It is related that one day the Sultán was seated in a portico of the palace over-looking the river Sábar, which was inundated. He saw passing over its waters a black object. Ordering it out, he found that it was a big earthen jar for holding water. Ordering its mouth to be opened he saw within it the body of a murdered man. He collected all the wine-sellers, and asked them to identify the jar. One of them admitted it as his handicraft and said that he had sold it to a certain village headman. The headman was summoned and after investigation it was proved that he had killed a certain Baniá. The man was sentenced to death. These were the only two murders committed during his reign. The wholesome fear excited by his summary justice prevented others,

It is with certainty related that Sultán Ahmed had a poetical mind, and some of his verses in praise of Saint Sayad Burhánud-din are extant. The following is the first line of one of his odes:—

“As a pole star to guide us in our time, Burhan is sufficient, His convincing proof for guidance being as well-known as his name.”¹

SULTÁN MUHAMMAD SHÁH, THE SON OF SULTÁN AHMED SHAH, A. H. 845 (A. D. 1443.)

On the third day of the death of Sultán Ahmed Shah, Sultán Muhammad Shah mounted the throne, and forthwith engaged himself in pleasures and luxuries, not caring for the affairs of state. In fact, he had not the capacity for them. He was, however, a great bestower of gold and his extreme liberality earned for him the name of “Gold Giver.”

On the twelfth of the month of Ramazán, A. H. 849 (A. C. 1445) Heaven gave him a son of auspicious birth whom he named Fateh Khán, and in the same year he marched against the Rájá of Ídar, who, taking shelter in the hills, sent ambassadors to the Sultán asking forgiveness for past faults. His ambassadors were accompanied by his daughter, whose great beauty fascinated the Sultán who accepted her in marriage, and made her the means of conferring on her father the kingdom of Ídar.

Marching thence into Bágar (Wágad) he laid waste that territory and returned to his capital.

In this year the great Saint Shekh Ahmed Khattu² styled Ganj-Bakhsh bade farewell to this world for a better one. The numerical value of the word Akhir-ul-aulia (آخرالاوليا) gives the Hejrá year of his demise. The Sheikh was a spiritual follower of Bááb Is-hák who sleeps his eternal sleep in the town of Khattu, in the district of Nagor, whence his title of Khattu.

¹ The word “Burhan” means a demonstration or proof and Burhánud-din being the Saint's name, the play upon words loses force in the translation.

² Born A. H. 738 (A. C. 1337) and died at the age of 111 lunar years. He is also known by the name of Ganj-Bakhsh or Treasure-Giver. See Blochmann's Ain-i-Akbari, 807, Note 1.

In the year A. H. 855 (A. D. 1451), the Sultán marched out with the intention of taking Chánpáner. The Rájá of the place, Gangadáas, son of Trimbakdaas gave battle and, being defeated, fled to the upper fortress which the Sultán besieged. When the garrison of the castle became straitened, the Rájá sent ambassadors to Sultán Mehmúd of Máudu offering to pay him a lakh of Tánkás¹ of gold for every march he should make to his assistance. Sultán Mehmúd without any regard for Islám in his venal greed for money, marched his army to Dohad which town was under Gujárát on the frontier of Málwá. On hearing of this, Sultán Muhammad Sháh raised the siege and came to the village of Kothra under Saonli (at present under Baroda) where falling ill, he returned to Ahmedábád and died on the twentieth of Muharram A. H. 855 (A. D. 1451-2), and was entombed near his father in the Royal Cemetery at Manek Chauk. He reigned nine years and some months.

The above is related on the authority of the Tárikh-i-Ahmed Sháhi.*

There are, however, authentic traditions coming down from father to son which are in vogue among the people of Málwá, and one of which goes on to say that Sultán Mehmúd Khiljí of Málwá possessed right royal qualities. He took great care of his soldiery, and was very just to his subjects, and, with all this, was very kind to the poor and the saintly, and was a great believer in them. Wherever he heard of a man with saintly qualities, far or near, he used to send presents and gifts and by avowing to him the sincerity of his belief used to win his heart.

Having heard that in Gujárát there was a righteous person of the name of Sháh Kamál, (whose shrine is now situated behind the mosque of Khudáwánd Khán, whose name was Sheikh Alím, in the Alímpura suburb of the city of Ahmedábád), Sultán Mehmúd who had formerly some connection and acquaintance with the Sheikh to whom he used always to send gifts and presents, asked of the Sheikh to pray for the gift to him of the kingdom of Gujarát, stating that if he, by his prayers obtained it, he would construct for the Sheikh a monastic residence or refectory endowed with revenues equal to those of the shrine of Sheikh Ahmed Khattú which were three crores of Gujarát Tánkás annually. As earnest money he sent him five hundred Tánkás of gold. Somebody communicated to Sultán Muhammad of Gujarát the information that with all his pretence to purity and sanctity, Sheikh Kamál had such a sordid love for gold, that in spite of his show of holiness he had made his Kuráan-cover the repository of the impure pelf sent to him by Mehmúd Khilji. Sultán Mehmúd, on inquiry, finding the circumstances to accord with facts, wrested the money in anger from Sháh Kamál. The Sheikh, who in consequence of former friendship had a corner of his heart for Sultán Mehmúd Khilji, being now touched to the core by this high-handedness of the Gujarát, Sultán began openly to pray every day for the bestowal of the kingdom of Gujarát on his friend of Málwa. After a short while, according to the tradition of the Prophet (on whom be prayer and prayers!) "that the prayers of the oppressed are always granted though they be sinners," his prayers were granted by Heaven, and he wrote to Sultán Mehmúd to say that the kingdom of Gujarát was by the Great Bestower of rule fixed in his name, and even drew up an order purporting to emanate from the dread Presence of the Ruler of rulers to that effect, and asked him to set out forthwith.

¹ According to Ferishta [Persian Text] I. 199—the weight of the Gold and the Silver tánkáh was one tolah. According to the present rates a tolah of gold costs Rs. 29-6 and a tolah of silver Re 1. According to Thomas's Chronicle of the Pathán Kings, (380) a Black (i.e., Copper) tánkáh was equal to $\frac{1}{16}$ th a Rupee.

* Sir Olive Bayley (p. 180) has Bahádúr Sháhi.

Sultán Mehmúd immediately set out with an army of eighty-thousand horse for the invasion of Gujarát.

When Muhammad Sháh heard this he consulted a Wánia who was his associate. That light-minded man advised him to flee and dispose of his harem and treasure in ships, saying that the enemy like a dog getting into an empty house would find himself at a wrong scent and go away, and the king approving of his advice began to prepare vessels. When Sheikh Atá-ulláh who had the title of Kiwá-mul-mulk (and who resided in Syedpúr and populated this suburb, near the Asuria gate, and who was after his death buried there) heard that the affairs of the kingdom were going to the bad, the Sayad came to Ahme-dabád, and seizing that Wánia took him in a corner, and having laid his hand on his dagger said: "Did you give the king this counsel to flee? I think before God that it is first necessary to slay you." The Wánia replied, "As you are a man of discernment, it cannot be concealed from you why your king instead of consulting brave and gallant men like you, in such a difficulty, consults a mean, cowardly Wánia like me! It is because he does not care to act upon and appreciate manly advice." The Sayad perceived that the Rania spoke the truth, and withdrawing his hand from his dagger for awhile, considered and thought he would now try the prince and gauge his mettle. Jalál Khán was at that time in the town of Neriád. The Sayad reached the place that very night, and said to Jalál Khán in consultation: "The king, your father, wishes to hand over to you the throne of the Sultánate that he with his women and treasure having embarked on boardships should go out fishing in the sea. If God should entrust you this kingdom, how would you act against Mehmúd Khilji who with a large army is coming to subdue Gujarát?" Jalál Khán said: "If this kingdom should come into my hands I swear by God, the King of kings, that I would destroy the enemy or die." On hearing this speech, the Sayad was pleased and said: "Although the father is unworthy to act, the prince is a worthy youth." He then explained to him what was in his mind and said: "The chief nobles of the kingdom find that your father does not care for the kingdom of Gujarát, and as the ruler is departing from your family, they have determined to seat you on the throne and fight with Mehmúd Khilji." The prince agreed, and the Sayad secretly introduced the prince into Ahmedabád by the Mirku gate that night and poured the liquor of death in the Sultán's cup who died instantly. This happened in the month of Muharram H. 855 (A. C. 1451).

SULTÁN KUTBUD-DÍN.

Sultán Kutbud-dín mounted the throne A. H. 855 (13th February, A. C. 1451) and according to the custom of his ancestors he honoured his soldiers with rewards and dresses of honour.

The author of the Tárikh-i-Bahádur Sháhi writes that about this time Sultán Mehmúd of Málwá marched into Gujarát and besieged Sultánabád which was commanded by Malik Álá-ud-dín bin Sohráb on the part of Sultán Kutbud-dín. The Malik shut the gate of the fort in his face and commenced fighting with both cannons and muskets. Sultán Mehmúd besieged the fort for a week. Afterwards through the mediation of Mubárák Khán, son of Ahmed Sháh, and uncle of Sultán Kutbud-dín, who had left Gujarát in the time of Sultán Muhánimad, he came forth and met Sultán Mehmúd who made him swear allegiance on the Kurán. He, however, took an evasive and quibbling oath, saying: "If Álá-ud-din should turn against the Master, may the Word of God become an enemy of his life." The Sultán listened to him and promoted the Malik and made him one of his chief Sirdárs, and marched from thence. And when he arrived at Sársá Pakri, a village of the District of Broach, he sent a message to Malik Marján, the commandant of the Broach fort, pointing out to him how he had honoured Álá-ud-dín, and persuaded him to act in same manner and to come to him, bringing with him the chief merchants of Broach. Sídí Marján, however, gave a stern reply, and strengthening the fort commenced to fight. Sultán Mohmúd asked Álá-ud-dín, in how many days he would conquer the fort. He replied, that it would require six or seven months at least of mining and making trenches on all sides. The Sultán said, "I wish in six months to subdue the whole of Gujarát." Marching thence he crossed the river Narbada and went towards Baroda. On the march, it so happened that one of his elephants became wild ("mast") and broke loose and at night entered Neriad, where the Brahmans slew it with swords. "When the Sultán came to Neriad and saw the elephant thus slain, and heard that the Brahmans had done this, he said: "The climate of Gujarát must be productive of bravery, that even the Brahmans of the place should dare to do such a deed." He then came to Baroda and looted that city.

Here the information was brought, that Sultán Kutbud-dín acting according to the advice of the saintly and holy men of the country had determined to oppose Sultán Mohmúd, and he advanced as far as Bánkáner Khán-púr on the river Mahi.

The advice given by the holy men of Gujarát to Sultan Kutbud-dín, under supernatural impulse, is omitted by the author of the Táríkh-i-Bahádur Sháhi. I, however, insert it here as I have heard it from such of the gentlemen of this country who have received the account as a tradition without break. Rumours of the numerical superiority of the Málwá army having reached Sultán Kutbud-dín, he was advised by his nobles to consult and ask for the benediction of Sayad Burhánud-dín, the lineal descendant of the saint Makhdúm-i-Jahání, who was considered the tutelar patron of the Sultáns of Gujarát. The Saint assured the Sultán in the words of the Kuraán:—"Many a small party conquers a large one by God's behest." So saying, and regretting the conduct of the late Sultán in respect to Saint Kamál he asked his son whom he used to style by the familiar diminutive of Manjhan¹ to go and expostulate with the angry Saint by saying that the author of his insult being dead it was not right to extend the ill-feeling to his son, a sentiment which he had the Kuranic sanction in the verse. "No carrier of weight beareth other than the weight of his own (actions)."² Therefore that he was to forgive and forget, as in mercy there was a luxury which revenge could not boast. He was to ask Sheikh Kamál to write to Sultán Mehmúd to return to his territory and to save the people of Gujarát from the evils of war.

Hazrat Sháh Álam went to the Sheikh, and word for word delivered his message, but the Sheikh did not agree, and gave an unfavourable reply which Sháh Álam communicating to his father, was desired by him to repair again to the Saint and beseech him to forgive the past and to entertain mercy and charity in accordance with his saintly exterior. "Ask the Saint with my humble regards," said Sháh Álam's father "to look to the safety of God's creatures and to practice forgiveness, especially as in forgiveness lay the weal of men, that Dervishes who hope most for Divine Mercy must act kind by according to the sacred verse: Those subdue their anger and do good unto men, Allah loves such doers of good." For (Poetry)—

"How well hath the pure Firdausi observed!
 Mercy (of Allah) alight on his pure sepulchre
 Hurt not an emmet that draggeth a comgrain
 For it hath life, and sweet life is pleasant."!

Sháh Álam again carried this message to the Sheikh and made repeated prayers for pardon, but the Sheikh descending from his first position of apathy began to make use of angry and excited words. The lord Sháh Álam again returned to his father and recapitulated all that had passed, saying that the Sheikh did not leave his selfishness for humanity, and that he did not like going to him any more. But the Saint Kutbul-Aktáb said: "In this matter the safety of the people is at stake, and we must not take offence for ourselves. Go you once more and say: 'your slave Burhan-ud-dín kisses your feet and conjures you by your love for Muhammad the Prophet of Allah to forgive this fault for his sake. The people of Mandu are hard and without feeling, and the men of this country will not be able to live under them.'" Sháh Álam again went and gave his message to Sheikh Kamál, but the Sheikh who had not reached the perfection of the attainments and qualities of a Derwîsh, and had become vainly content with the little of Divine Light that had shone on him, refused his prayer, roughly saying: "It is now seven years that by fasts and prayers I have got the kingdom of Gujarát transferred to the name of Mehmúd Khilji." It is impossible for me now to turn back Mehmúd Khilji, who has always showed belief in me and love for me, for the sake of the son of the man who oppressed me. Go back young Sayad and tell Burhán-ud-dín with our loving prayers that I have let off the arrow from my hand and it is hard to re-call it. The lord Sháh Álam smiled and repeated the Persian couplet:

¹ Manjhan is the affectionate form of Manjhálá—a middle son, or daughter. He was according to the Miráte Ahmedi the eleventh of the twelve sons of the Saint.

² Lá tazīro wazīratun viara ukhra.

"So near do saints in Allah's favour stand That shaft once sped, back they can call to hand."

On hearing these lines, the Sheikh flew into a rage and retorted: "This is really no child's play that it may be subject to change according to the fancy of the moment. Look you towards the Divine Tablet on which the destinies of creation are indited and see.¹ Do you not find that the kingdom of Gujarát hath passed from the rule of the Tánk Dynasty to Mehmúd Khilji. So saying he raised his hand and lo!! it held an order written on paper manufactured in Tús² and handing it to Sháhi Álam continued: "Exaggeration in this matter is of no use. Go ye back and recount the facts to your father." On hearing this the blood of Hāshim in the vein of Sháh Álam, waxed hot. He tore to shreds the order or grant that the Sheikh had produced as coming from Allāh and said: "This writ without the authentication of the Kutb-ul-Aktáb (his father) is useless." Then came the Sheikh to know his mistake and found that the Will of Allāh was otherwise than what he believed it to be. The Sheikh at once fainted and saying: "Young Sayad, thou hast used force!" expired. When Sayad Burhán-ud-dín heard this, he said: "Manjhla! thou hast acted hastily."

Sultán Mehmúd heard of this, but in proud self-assurance continued to advance. The people of Gujarát were scared and terrified. Many determined to emigrate, and some prepared for death and separation from home and family.

Sultán Kutbud-dín requested the Saint, to, either himself accompany his army to the field or send his son whom he used to call Bápji (or dear father) in respect for his sanctity; and the old saint ordered Sháh

¹ According to the Musalman belief the destinies of all things created and to be created, are recorded from the beginning of Eternity on a Tablet called the "Lauh."

² The modern Meohéd, once famous for its paper manufacture.

Álam to go, considering that Sultán Mehmúd was the transgressor and, Sultán Kutbud-dín the victim. On the second day's march a scarcity of water was felt, so that the Saint could not get water for the performance of his midnight ablutions. So the saint Sháh Álam asked leave of the Sultán to go, assuring him that victory was in his name. The Sultán, however, requested him to give him his sword as an instrument of good fortune, but the Saint said that he should content himself with the blessing, as the sword if not properly taken care of would do him harm instead of good. The king said it was impossible that he should intentionally give any slight to such a holy token. The Saint said that a day would come when such an event would certainly come to pass.¹ But the Sultán's eyes filled with tears, so he girded his sword round the waist of the king. It was at this time mentioned that the Málwá Sultán possessed an elephant as big as a mountain and as fierce as a giant. That its name was Ghálíb Jang² and that the sound of the war kettle-drum always used to make it wild, in which condition no elephant could cope with it, and if by chance any did oppose it, the Málwá elephant never left it without ripping its belly open. For this reason this terrible animal was nick-named 'the butcher.' Sháh Álam, having examined all the elephants of the Sultán's stables chose a middle-sized elephant who had not till then reached the age of masti or rutting, and rubbed his hand over his head saying, "Oh! Shudani!³ by Allah's help rip open the belly of the butcher." Then placing in his bow an unfeathered and blunt arrow he shot towards the supposed direction of Sultán Mehmúd's army saying, "This arrow reaches and breaks the umbrella stick of Mehmúd." He then returned to Ahmedábád.

Sultán Kutbud-dín marched towards the enemy, crossed the river Mahi, and halted at Khánpur Wákáner.

Rájá Gangádass of Chánpáner who had rebelled, and gone over to Sultán Mehmúd instigating him and guiding his steps, represented to Sultán Mehmúd that as the enemy had occupied the ford near Khánpur, he should go by the way of Itádi of the Bálásinor Parganá on to Kapadwanj.⁴ The Sultán approving followed this direction. In this march Malik Imáduđ-dín bin Sohráb told the nobles who were his companions: "I have sworn not to desert my Master in this business. My Master

¹. And the prophecy did prove true. See the account of the death of Sultan Kutbud-din, p. 40

² Ghálíb Jang, the over-powering in battle.

³ Shudani, a Persian word meaning literally 'promising.'

⁴ The chief town of the sub-division of that name in the Kaira District.

is Kutbud-dín. I will therefore go to him, and you follow your Lord." Hence they separated, and he joined Sultán Kutbud-dín, and told him that the enemy was marching by way of Kapadwanj and requested him to march in that direction, and Sultán Kutbud-dín accordingly arrived and pitched his tents there before Sultán Mehmúd's arrival. On the other side Sultán Mehmúd arrived, and encamped three kos off. Sultán Mehmúd on the night of the 1st of Safar intended to make a night attack, but losing his way wandered about till dawn. At sunrise Sultán Kutbud-dín drew up his army and placed Diláwar Khán, with a strong army and fierce elephants in command of the right wing, and he entrusted the left wing to Malik Nizám Mukhlisul-mulk. He himself with Khán Jahán and Malik Munír Vazír, Muthá Khán son of Muzaffar Sháh and Zíá-ul-mulk and Tu-ghán Sháh Khatri called Iftikhár Khán and Sikandar Khán bin Sultán Muhammad bin Ahmed Sháh and Malik Halím Aázam Khán and Kádar Khán commanded the centre; in the van he placed his brave and experienced veterans. On the other side Sultán Mehmúd opposed his left opposite to his enemy's right and his van to the enemy's van. It is related that when the battle began to wage hotly, Sultán Mehmúd, riding on an elephant of gigantic size and strength, Ghálib Jang, with a black umbrella on the howdah refulgent in the light of the sun-like flame, took up a position whence with the aid of his gigantic elephant at one onset he intended to scatter the ranks of the enemy. He placed his elephant in front of the ranks like a key with which to open the lock of the serried ranks of the enemy. He little knew that the lock closed by Destiny cannot be opened by the key of human device.

Sultán Kutbud-dín, on the other hand, was riding a roan horse and had on a green umbrella. Each of the kings, standing in the centre of his army, was on his side performing prodigies of valour, leading their men on by courageous words and example, and promises of reward and preferment. It is said that at first Muzaffar Khán, Governor of Chandori, with certain famous elephants, on behalf of Sultán Mehmúd routed the left wing of Sultán Kutbud-dín, and plundering, penetrated as far as the Sultán's treasure, which his men commenced loading on beasts of burden. In the meantime the right of Sultán Kutbud-dín defeated the left of Sultán Mehmúd. And van engaging with van, the conflict reached the centre, and the elephants of Sultán Kutbud-dín began to fight shy of the tremendous elephant "Ghálib Jang" of the Málwá Sultán. Sultán Kutbud-dín said: "Bring "Shudani" (the elephant), which Sháh Álam had blessed and ordained as the destined instrument of the great elephant's death, "that it may rip up the belly of 'Kassáb,' as Bápji (the dear Father) has ordered." Shudani charged an engaged the Kassáb (butcher). At this moment a party of men, residents of Dholká, called Durwázíás, strong like elephants and brave like lions, dismounting from their horses, hamstringing the Kassáb like a cow, in a slaughter-house, and felled him to the ground, the Shudanis tusks having pierced its vitals and key-like opened out its entrails. About this time also an arrow flying from behind struck the umbrella-stick of Sultán Mehmud, and thus was wrought the miracle predicted by the Saint. The army of Sultán Mehmúd seeing this took to their heels. Muzaffar Khán, the life and soul of this invasion, was captured, and at the order of the Sultán his head was severed from his body and hung up on the gateway of Kapadwanj. These events happened on Friday, the first of Safár¹ A. H. 855 (March A. C. 1451). Sultán Mehmúd who had set his heart with pride on his army returned beaten and crestfallen; and Sultán Kutbud-dín who had set his trust, according to the verse of the Holy Kurán: "When thou shootest (an arrow) it is not thou that shootest, but it is Allah,"² on the word of the holy men, returned triumphant and victorious.

It is related that Sháh Álam when departing from Sultán Kutbud-dín's camp, asked him to vow some offering to the souls of the Prophets. The Sultán offered one golden Tánká for each of the prophets. The Saint said it was too much and difficult for any worldly person to give. The Sultán insisted. The Saint said: "Make the Tánka one of silver instead of gold." The Sultán agreed. After the victory the Sultán sent 70,000 silver Tánkás to Sháh Álam for the offering, but the Saint returned them, saying that the number of the prophets was far greater than the number of the Tankás sent. The Sultán did not reply and neglected the agreement and Sháh Álam from his own treasury gave out one lakh and twenty-five thousand Tánkás of silver in charity to the poor. One day the Sultán suppressing all mention of the circumstances under which he had vowed the Tankás, said to the Saint's father that he had sent so many Tánkás for charity to the young Saint which did not meet the honour of his acceptance and which he had returned. The Saint's father remonstrated with his son on the matter, saying that in charities there ought to be no haggling. But

¹. The second month of the Musalmán Calendar.

². Má ramáita is ramáita walákinna Lába ramá.

Sháh Alam remained silent. This circumstance, however, was the root of a disagreement between the king and the Saint which ripened as time went on, and produced consequences which shall be mentioned in their proper place.

It is said that then Sultán Mehmúd of Málwá arrived on the confines of Gujarát, some Hindu clerks who had been dismissed by the late Sultán Muhammad of Gujarat, went and met Sultán Mehmúd. He asked them for a statement of the revenues of Gujarát, and they stated to him that two shares of the country were divided between the Jágirs of the military and Crown lands and one share went towards charitable assignments to religious persons and institutions. Thus it remained till the time of Sultán Kutbud-dín, and each king increased the religious share. Sultán Mehmúd said: "To conquer Gujarát would always be difficult; for it has not only an army of soldiers to defend it, but an army of holy men to pray for its prosperity."

After Kutbud-dín returned to Ahmedabád victorious, he gave himself up to wine and women, and devoted his time to the giving of splendid entertainments and luxurious banquets. He built the Hauzi Kánkariáh, the 'Nagína' Bágh in the middle of the Kánkariáh tank and the Makadpur palace. Each one of these equals the mansions of Paradise and the gardens of Eden. Some years ago, this humble person saw all of them, but now except the abovementioned tank and garden (or the Kánkariáh and Nagína Bagh), no trace of them remains.

In A. H. 855 (A. C. 1451) Sultán Mehmúd Khilji brought an army to conquer the Nágor country, and Sultán Kutbud-dín ordered Sayad Atá-ulláh (also styled Kiwámul-mulk) to proceed to the aid of the ruler of Nágor with a large army. They had nearly reached the confines of Sambhar¹ when Sultán Mehmúd hearing of their arrival retreated and returned to his own country. Kiwámul-mulk also returned to his own country.

After this Firúz Khán Dandáni, ruler of Nágor, died and Mujáhid Khán his brother having expelled Shams Khán, son of Firúz Khán usurped the rule over Nágor. Shams Khán going over to the Ráná obtained his protection, and with his assistance attacked Nágor. Mujáhid Khán being unable to resist fled, and went to Sultán Mehmúd Khilji. At this time the Ráná wished to break down the fortification of Nágor.¹ Shams Khán objecting things came to such a pass that war was declared between them. The Ráná returned vexed to his own country and again marched on Nágor with an army. Shams Khán strengthened the fort of Nágor, and himself came to Sultán Kutbud-dín to demand aid and gave his daughter in marriage to the Sultán who sent Rái Amichand Mánek and Malik Gadái and others to relieve the garrison of Nágor, and kept Shams Khán with him. The above mentioned Amírs fought with the Ráná near Nágor, a severe conflict, in which though many Musalman and numerous Hindus were killed success inclined to neither side. The Ráná after laying waste, the neighbourhood of Nágor returned to his own city. In A. H. 360 (A. C. 1456) Sultán Kutbud-dín marched an army into the Ráná's country to revenge his raid on Nágor. On his way thither Krishna Deorá² Rájá of Sirohi, was admitted to an audience and petitioned the Sultán that the Ráná had wrested from him the fort of Ábu which had been the residence of his ancestors, and requested redress. The Sultán ordered Malik Shaábán Imádul-mulk to take the fort of Ábu from the servants of the Ráná and hand it over to Krishna Deorá. The Malik unacquainted with warfare in a mountainous country, got entangled with his army in the defiles near the fort. The enemy closed all the passes, and coming on them from all sides of the hill defeated the Malik, and very many of whose men were slain. The news of this reverse reached the Sultán at Kombhalmer. About this time the Ráná sallied out of the fort and being defeated returned to it. The Sultán invested Kombhalmer and sent strong detachments to ravage to the Ráná's country. They say that these forays so impoverished the Ráná's country that not a head of cattle was left in any Hindu's house, and innumerable male and female slaves fell into the hands of the Muhammadans. Ráná Kumbha being helpless asked pardon and subscribed to strong covenants never again to attack

¹ A town in the province of Ajmeer about forty-one miles, north-east of the city of Ajmeer.

¹ This is an error. It was only a part of the fortifications that the Ráná wished to destroy. Ferishtah (II. 379) is more accurate. He says that the Chitor Ráná, Kumbha had agreed to help Shams Khán on condition of Shams Khán allowing him to permanently dismantle three of the battlements of the fort of Nágor. He was anxious to place this lasting humiliation on the fort to transmit to posterity a sign of his having avenged the crushing defeats and reverses inflicted by Shams Khán's father on Rána Mokal, the Rána's father. Though Shams Khán had at first no option but to accede to this stipulation, he was afterwards so taunted and put to shame by his kinsmen that he said: "Our heads must fall before these battlements go down."

² The name is very unintelligibly written in all the MSS. Sir Clive Bayley writes it Khátia. My MS. has Kanha-Kanahiya or Kashna. The Bombay Gazetteer History of Gujarát, however, has Krishna (p. 33, Note 3).

Nágor or any Muhammadan territory. The Sultán returned to his country and rewarded his army and re-commenced his career of enjoyment. After some time ambassadors of Mehmúd Khilji arrived with a message to the effect that the quarrels between believers were the cause of security and peace to the evil-minded infidels, that the better course would be for all Muhammadans, being brethren, to unite, and having made agreements of friendship, combine to expel the wrong headed infidels, especially this turbulent Ráná Kumbhá who had so frequently harassed the Musalmáns. "Let the Sultán," said he, "march against him from that side, and I will march from this, until between us we shall destroy him and take his country in equal shares." The Sultán consenting made firm agreements regarding this, and in A. H. 861 (A. C. 1457) led an army against the Ráná Kumbhá. On the other side Sultán Mehmúd marched against him until he reached the Kasbá of Mandisúr. Sultán Kutbud-dín first reduced the fort of Ábu and handed it over to Krishna Deorá and marched thence to Kombhalmer and plundered its vicinity. At this time Ráná Kumbhá was in the fortress of Chitor. The Sultán turned in the direction of Chitor. The Ráná with 40,000 horsemen and 200 picked elephants issued from Chitor and having occupied narrow defiles and taken up a difficult position commenced the battle. They say that the battle lasted for five days and a cup of water sold for five phadiáhs, which is equivalent in value to twelve tánkahs of the Muradi currency. On the fifth day the Muslims were victorious and the Ráná defeated and crestfallen with grieved heart and pale face returned to Chitor. The end of this affair was that the Ráná Kumbhá sent envoys, who, with great humility and a thousand apologies and prayers for pardon, agreed to pay tribute and never to harass the Nágor country again. The petition was granted and the Sultán returned to his own country, the Ráná having pacified Sultán Mehmúd by the cession of Mandisúr and some other Parganáhs which were contiguous to the Málwá frontier. Three months after this Ráná Kumbhá broke his engagement and marched to plunder Nágor. The news reached Malik Shaábán Imádul-mulk, the vazír at midnight. The Malik at once went to the palace, enquired for the king, and was told that he was asleep. The Malik said, "Awake him?" The slave girls said, "We dare not." The Malik then himself entered the sleeping apartment and commenced to shampoo the king's foot. The Sultán awoke and asked, "Who is it?" The Malik replied, "Your slave

¹ Sir Olive Bayley says it was six months after this.

Shaabán." He asked, "Is it good news?" He replied, "All is well." The Sultán said, "Then explain." The Malik said, "News has arrived that the accursed Kumbhá has again broken his treaty, and has marched againts Nágor. If the Sultán will at once beat the drums for a march and himself issue forth from the city, the Ráná on hearing of it will turn back and retire, and not act in a similar manner again; if not, complications will arise. We must, therefore, give the matter prompt consideration." The Sultán said, "My head is heavy with the fumes of wine and I am unable to mount." The Malik said, "Let the king come in a palanquin." The king at once ordered the drums to be sounded for a march and sitting in a pálki came outside the city on the Kumbhalmer side. The spies of the Ráná at once communicated to him the state of affairs and the Ráná immediately turned and went to his own country. After this in A. H. 862 (A. C. 1458) Sultán Kutbud-dín led an army by way of Sirohi and thence entering the Ráná's country laid it waste and returned on the third Rajab¹ to his capital. In A. H. 863 (A. C. 1461) Sultán Kutbud-dín's cup of life having filled he cried 'Adsum' to the call of Alláh. The length of his reign was eight years six months and thirteen days.

It is related that when Sultán Kutbud-dín mounted the throne, the mother of Fateh Khán, his step-brother (the future ~~M~~ehmúd Begdá, the most renowned of the Gujarát Sultáns) Bībí Mughlī took shelter with her sister Bībí Mirghi, the wife of the great saint Sháh Álam, the mother of Sháh Bhíkan another son of Sháh Álam's and the daughter of Jám Júná², ruler of Sindh. Sháh Álam assured her to be satisfied, and live in peace in his house with her sister, and that she would be out of reach of danger. The mother of Fateh Khán with the greatest of care used to live with her son in that house, but she was so afraid for the life of her son that she was always on the alert. One day while in intoxication Sultán Kutbud-dín called Fateh Khán to mind, and asked where he was. He was informed that Fateh Khán was with his aunt in Sháh Álam's house and was a prime favourite of the Sháh. This kindled the jealous rage of the Sultán who determined to take the life of the young man, ignorant of the fact that this determination of his would ultimately prove his own ruin and destruction.

One day he sent a message, which gave forth the evil intentions he harboured against his brother, to Sháh Álam insisting on his giving up Fateh Khán to himself whether the Saint wished it or not. The Sháh returned word saying that the young man had, for fear of his life, taken refuge with him, under which circumstances it would be highly improper to send him back. That he was the ruler, and might seize him wherever he could lay hands on him. The Sultán hereupon moving from the city, took up his residence in palaces of Khedpúr, near Rasulábád, where the Saint used to live, and sent out spies with orders to give immediate information in case they saw Fateh Khán that he may be captured. One day the Sultán sent his chief Queen Ráni Rupmanjri, who was a disciple of the Saint, accompanied by a large party of eunuchs to the house of Sháh Alam with orders to search out, seize, and bring Fateh Khán. The Ráni saw Fateh Khán sitting near the Saint, and caught his hand and began to drag him away. The Saint smiled and said, "You take Fateh Khán's hand to-day, but a day will surely come when he will take yours." And as predicted, it came to pass that Fateh Khán, as Mehmud Begdá, married this very queen after the death of Sultán Kutbud-dín. On hearing these words, the Ráni desisted and dropping his hand apologised and asked the pardon of Sháh Alam, and returning told her husband that, however much she searched, she could not find Fateh Khán.

¹ The seventh month of the Musalman Calendar.

² One of the Jáms of Thatta in Sindh.

One day the Sultán heard that Fateh Khán was at his lessons with Sháh Alam. The Sultán at once riding a fleet horse reached the mansion of the Saint, and began unannounced to push in. The porter whose name was Mukbil resisting, the Sultán said, "Do you oppose my going to the Bápjí (dear father) by his orders?" When he heard the voice of the Sultán, the Saint cried out to the porter to give entry to the Sultán, saying at the same time to Fateh Khán, "Read on 'old fellow' ;" and the ten-year-old Fateh Khán assumed to the sight of the Sultán the appearance of an old man with gray hair and brows and bent back. The Sultán sat for a while in the room, but besides the Saint and the old man he could not see any one in it, though he looked very attentively about. He at last got up ashamed and went away venting his disappointed wrath on his spies.

Sultán Mehmúd used to say: "In those days they used to dress me in female garb to guard against the possible contingency of my being recognized by the Sultán's spies. One day while on the balcony with my nurse, a spy gave this information to the Sultán who dashed into the place; my nurse on seeing him lost her senses, and somebody informing Sháh Alam of it, he said, 'Fear not, how can he take a tiger?' When the Sultán caught my hand, my nurse cried out, 'Oh, this is the daughter of such a one!' naming some man or other of the Saint's kin. The Sultán examined me closely and found also, to my surprise, that I was organically as well as externally a woman! He went away, and told his companions the circumstance. They said: 'At any rate you should have brought the person downstairs.' He again came up, and again taking my hand was so terrified to see in it a tiger's paw that he ran away, and never again repeated an attempt on my life."

1 The words used in the text: "Padh dokrí!" supply an interesting instance of the strange mixture of Sindhi-Hindi, and Gujaráti in vogue in these days among the Ahmedábád Bukháris.

The rancour of the Sultán towards Sháh Alam gathered force every day, and at that period BÍBÍ Mirghi, the wife of Sháh Alam, died. Sháh Alam now considered himself bound by religion as well as propriety to tell BÍBÍ Mughli, the mother of Fateh Khán and the sister of his deceased wife, to now look out for herself a separate residence, as the death of her sister removed, according to law, the sisterly connection hitherto existing between her and the Saint, and admitted of the possibility of marriage. BÍBÍ Mughli was plunged into profound grief at these words of the Sháh. It was at this time that Jám Firúz, the uncle of the ladies, told Sháh Alam of a matter which, till then, was a secret.

The fact was, that Jám Júna, the king of Thatta in Sindh, had two daughters, BÍBÍ Mirghi and BÍBÍ Mughli, the first of whom he affianced to Sultán Muhammad and the second to Sháh Alam. But the Sultán, hearing of the greater beauty of BÍBÍ Mughli, partly by force and partly by gold, persuaded the ministers of the Jám to marry BÍBÍ Mughli to him and BÍBÍ Mirghi to Sháh-i-Alam.

It is related that when Sháh Alam, with a sad heart, related the story of the ruse to his father, Kutbi-Alam, the old Saint, gave vent to the prophetic words: "My son, you are fated to possess both the cow and the calf"¹; told him not to grieve, as he was destined to have both the ladies. This saying of his father's Sháh Alam remembered, and observing the great inclination towards him of BÍBÍ Mughli, he married her, and the BÍBÍ also used night and day to serve him like a true lover and a handmaid in the great love that she bore for him, a love which the Sháh also looking to the great beauty and virtues of the lady to as great an extent reciprocated. One night the Sháh saw his wife, in the devoted love and homage that she had for him, sweeping his room with her long hair. Sháh Alam, coming to know of and enchanted with her devotion, asked her to request something of him, saying, that the gates of Heaven's mercy were open. She said that, as he had prophesied that Fateh Khán would ascend the throne of his ancestors, she prayed him to be as kind to Fateh Khán after he mounted the throne as he was during his boyhood; and that he must not be offended with any of Fateh Khán's forwardnesses or insolences if any appeared from him. Sháh Alam said, "It is destined that Fateh Khán is, in a short period, to mount the throne of Gujarát, and it is also destined that after doing so he will often be insolent towards me, and I shall, for thy sake, pass over his conduct."

¹ The words in the text are: "Bete! tusádh nasíb-dheun wa bachchah." The prophecy indicated the lady coming to the young Saint with her son at a future date.

One day the Sháh sportively placed an empty basket of fruit on Fateh Khán's head. His mother, always alive to the interests of her son, requested the Sháh to place the basket upside down, and when he did so, she fondly drew from it the omen of his being one day covered by a royal umbrella.

The marriage of Sháh Alam with his father's widow was the cause of Sultán Kutbud-dín's openly expressing his displeasure with the Saint. One day, in intoxication, he mounted and made for the suburb of Rasulábád and gave orders for its destruction. The men, ordered on this duty, went about demoralized with an indescribable fear, running from one to another, until the Sultán himself rode up to them, pressing them angrily onwards by hand and tongue; at this time, by the ordainment of Heaven, a mad camel appeared on the scene. He attacked the Sultán, who drawing his sword, aimed a blow at its head, but missing, hit himself on the knee. The Sultán fell down from his horse, and was taken to the place in a pálkhi where he died after three days in the year A. H. 863 (A. C. 1458). People say it was not a camel, but the Angel of Death himself in that form, and that the common and popular metaphor likening the camel to the Angel dates from that period.¹ They say that it was the self-same sword which was presented by Sháh Alam to Sultán Kutbud-dín at the opening of the war with Sultán Mehmúd Khilji with which he now struck himself this blow.

¹ In Persian and Urdu poetry the camel is usually likened to an angel.

Some people relate the circumstance of his death otherwise. They say that one day the Sultán ordered the male population of city of Ahmedabad, not to go out of their houses, and to keep their windows closed, as he wanted to go about, showing the city to his harem. While promenading the streets of the city with his harem, a man suddenly emerged out of a back-alley. In a transport of rage the Sultán struck him a blow with his sword which, the man at once disappearing, fell on his knee. God knows the truth.

It is related that when in his last illness one day, when in great suffering while seated in one of the projecting windows of the palace overlooking the river, the Sultán observed a wood-cutter with great labour fording the river with a great load of wood from the other bank of the river Sábarmati. After crossing the stream the man, unfolding his girdle-cloth, took out some thick loaves of millet, and, with no other condiment but three onions and a huge appetite, consumed the whole with great gusto. He then went to the river bank and took a hearty drink, and coming to the shade of the wall below the window, lay himself down to enjoy a sound sleep. The Sultán overhead, heaved a deep sigh, wishing it were possible for him to change places with the sturdy, but poor wood-cutter !

The author of the "Bahádur Sháhi" says that Sultán Kutbud-dín was poisoned by his wife, who was the daughter of Shams Khán, with a view to make her father the successor of her husband to the throne of Gujarát. When the Sultán was in the last agony Shams Khán was put to death by Sultán Kutbud-dín's nobles, and the Sultán's mother ordered her slave girls to cut the lady to pieces. It is possible that poison was administered when the Sultán was confined to bed on account of his wound. But God knows best.

ACCOUNT OF THE ACCESSION OF DÁÚD, UNCLE OF SULTÁN KUTBUD-DÍN.

On the third day after Sultán Kutbud-dín's death Dáúd Khán, son of Sultán Ahmed, was selected by the great and powerful vazírs and amírs of Gujarát. On the third of Rajab, A. H. 863 (A. D. 1458-59) he was deposed from the throne on the fifteenth of the same month. They say that while yet he was not properly invested with the powers of a ruler, he gave a sweeper,¹ who was his neighbour during the days he was a Khán, hopes of promotion to the title of Imáduł-mulk, while the great noble of that name was alive. In the same way he promised another low man the title of Burhánul-mulk, while the noble of that name, the chief of Sultán Kutbud-dín's nobles, was alive. These matters becoming public from the talk of these base men, the great nobles and vazírs of the Kingdom said among themselves:—"This man passes such orders while yet his orders have no force, what will he do when they become conclusive? Let us remedy the evil before it happens." Then again he began to do mean actions, taking accounts of the royal clothes and ornaments, at the time of Sultán Ahmed I. (may he be given high place in Heaven!) and taking away the ornaments of the ladies of Sultán Muzaffar's harem and sending them to the treasury. His first order was to reduce the grain thrown to pigeons in charity, and reducing the number of lights in the palace. The nobles pronounced him unworthy the Sultánic throne of Gujarát, and proposed Fateh Khán to succeed him, sending Imáduł-mulk, the son of Sohráb, to Bībī Mughli, who, in the first instance, declined to put her son in the dangers and temptations of the throne. The nobles, however, insisted, and, in the end, brought Fateh Khán to the Bhadar with right royal pomp and circumstance. The nobles made him royal obeisance, and named him Sultán Mehmúd Sháh. They say when the noise of Sultán Mehmúd's progress to the Bhadar fell on the ear of Sultán Dáúd, he asked what it all was, and being told the fact, he betook himself by a back door to the river Sábarmati, and made himself an example of the truth of the Kuránic verse: "Thou givest the rule unto him thou willest and deprivest him of it thou wishest." After some days he joined the fakírs of the monastery of Shekh Adham Rúmi, in which position he, in a short while, made great progress, and died shortly after. He reigned twenty-seven days.

¹ The word used in the text is farrásh, or carpet-spreader.

SULTÁN MEHMÚD BEGDA ASCENDS THE THRONE OF GUJARÁT IN THE MONTH OF SHAÁBÁN

A. H. 863 (A. C. 1459).

The Defender of the Faith, Mehmúd Sháh Begda, put his foot on the throne of the Sultánate on Sunday, the 1st^o of the glorious month of Shabaán H. 863 (A. C. 18th June 1459) in the great city of Ahmedábád, and by his accession he conferred grace and lustre on the country of Gujarát. The origin and cause of the surname Begdá are said by some to be the following:—

Begda, in the Gujaráti language, is the name for a bullock whose horns stretch horizontally forward in the manner of a person extending his arms to embrace another, the moustaches of the Sultán being so thick and long that they resembled the horns of such a bullock. Others say, that Begdá is derived from "be" two, and "gadh," a castle, from the fact of his having taken the two rock-fortresses of Júnágad and Chám-páner; and hence he was called Begdá. God best knows the truth.

May it not remain secret that this Sultán was the best of the Gujarát Sultáns as a ruler, as a warrior, and a dispenser of justice. He was never exceeded in worth by any of the dynasty, either by those that preceded, or by those that followed, him. His love for Islám, and his sound sense in his youth as well as manhood, were great. His physical strength as well as courage were enormous, as was, notwithstanding that he was a king, his appetite. The quantity of food he used to eat was one Gujaráti maund, the seer of which consisted of fifteen "Bahlúlis."¹ After taking his regular meal, he used to eat five seers of parched rice as dessert, and at the time of retiring to rest he used to order two plates of "Samosás" (triangular minced-meat sausages) to be placed on each side of his bed, of which he used to sup whenever he used to get up from his sleep (which he did several times) during the night. Immediately on getting up and saying his prayers, he used to breakfast on a cup of Mecca honey, a cup of ghí or clarified butter and a hundred and fifty golden-plantains. And he used often to say: "Oh God Almighty! if thou hadst not given thy slave Mehmúd the blessing of dominion, who could have filled his belly?"

The virile powers and cravings of the Sultán were in proportion to his appetite and digestion. The women of his country were too weak for him; and, after cohabitation with his several of his wives, he used to derive satisfaction only from a young and strapping Abyssinian lass. He was thirteen years, two months, and three days old, when he ascended the throne; and, according to ancestral usage, he gave the military gifts and presents, and conferred titles of distinction on some persons.

Some months after this, some misguided nobles, of the names of Kabíruddin Sultáni, surnamed Burhánul-mulk, Mauláná Khizr, surnamed Seiful-mulk, and Chánd, the son of Ismáíl, surnamed Azud-ul-mulk and Khájá Muhammad Hisámul-mulk, having quarrelled with the vazír Malik Shaábán Imádul-mulk, set themselves to work the ruin of his wealth and position. Going one day to the Sultán's ante-chamber before the time of Imádul Mulk's arrival, they represented to the Sultán that the vazír contemplated treason and wished to set up his son Shahábuddín on the throne and become independent. That they were true to their salt and could not close their eyes to this, and asked the Sultán to take immediate action. "And what," asked the Sultán, "could that be?" They suggested that the vazír should either be killed or imprisoned. The Sultán became silent. When the vazír came to the ante-chamber, the nobles seizing him put a collar round his neck, and fetters on his legs, and placed over him five hundred of their own trusted guards, and sent him up to the Bhadhar for imprisonment. They then went away well pleased to their houses, and engaged themselves in pursuits of pleasure. When night fell, Abdulláh, the chief of the elephants' stables, represented to the Sultán that it was not advisable to have imprisoned Imádul-mulk, that the nobles, who were of the Malik's party, were preparing to flee the country, and that the refractory nobles who were the secret partisans of Habsb Khán, the son of Ahmed Sháh, the uncle of the Sultán, had taken him to their house where they were keeping him, waiting for the first opportunity to set him up as king. On hearing these words, the Sultán went and consulted his mother, who, summoning Abdulláh and administering heavy oaths to him, asked him to state the whole truth to her, which he repeated. The Sultán on his part consulted his devoted and faithful servants, Muhammad Hájí and Malik Isá. They were of opinion to immediately release Imádul-mulk and surprise the malcontent and treacherous nobles, and to give up their houses to plunder. The Sultán ordered Abdulláh to bring out all the royal elephants in full armour and draw them up before the Darbár, and, having seated himself on the throne, said to Sharful-mulk: "Bring out that faithless Imádul-mulk that I may wreak my vengeance on him, and make an example of him." Sharful-mulk, going to execute the royal orders, was not obeyed by the guards of the rebellious nobles, and returned, and reported to the Sultán how matters stood; the Sultan himself going to the Bhadhar called aloud to "bring out Shaábán." When the guards heard the voice of the Sultán they could not but obey, and brought their prisoner forward. When they had done so, the Sultán said to them: "Bring the traitor up to me that I may ask him how he entertained such designs and had no thought of the royal wrath." When the guards did so, he ordered his fetters off. When the guards saw this, some of them ran away to their masters, but some of them stood up, with folded arms, and told the Sultán that they were his servants, that they had imprisoned the vazír at what they deemed to be the royal command, and now released him under the same.

¹ A maund of forty seers, the seer being fifteen Bahlúli. The Bahlúli according to Elliot's History of India (v. 115, note 2) being $\frac{1}{4}$ the rupee.

In the morning the Sultán went up to the Bhadhar, and sat there, and when the nobles heard of it they, with their supporters and men all armed and equipped, set out for the Darbár. At that time there were, in attendance on the Sultán, of slaves and servants, only three hundred persons. Some of them proposed that the Sultán should go out by the Sábarmati postern, and having conveyed himself to a place of safety assemble the army and come back, but the Sultán did not give ear to these craven counsels and stood his ground firmly. When the nobles drew near the Bhadhar, the Maliks Shaábán, Háji and Kálú asked leave to order the elephants to be made to charge against the approaching rebellious nobles, who, they said, would be sure to take to flight. The Sultán consenting, about six hundred elephants were made to rush at the nobles, who dispersed and ran away, and their soldiers threw up their arms and concealed themselves as best they could in the city. The nobles betook themselves out of the city and wandered about in every direction. Hisámul-mulk went towards Pattan where his brother Rukn-ud-dín was police officer. Kabíruddín Azdul-mulk fled to the Sábharkanthá, where a Rajpút, whose brother he had killed, beheaded him, and brought his head to the Sultán who hung it up at the city gateway. Burhánul-mulk was an extremely fat man and could not run. He could only ride as far as Sarkhez, where a eunuch of the Sultán, who had gone on a religious visit to the shrine of Sheikh Ahmed Khattú, found him having let his horse loose, sitting in a corner at a spot where at present the village Fatchpur is situated. He was caught, and brought to the Sultán, who ordered him to be thrown below an elephant's foot. Mauláná Khizr Sei-ful-mulk was deported to Dú for imprisonment, whence he was re-called afterwards through the kind mediation of Malik Shaábán and a jágir given to him.

At the time of these events the Sultán was fourteen years old; yet he showed such strength of mind and mature judgment, that he destroyed the rebels and gave redress to the wronged, and from these days till his death his word was so effective that it was never disobeyed. For the services they performed at this period, the Sultán gave the titles of Azdul-mulk to Malik Háji and appointed him Master of Requests and Petitions of the kingdom, of Ikhtiárul-mulk to Malik Baháuddín, of Farhatul-mulk to Malik Túghá, of Nizámul-mulk to Malik Ísá, of Burhánul-mulk to Malik Saádulláh, of Imádul-mulk to Malik Kálú, and of Mukhlisul-mulk to Malik Sárang, whom he sometime after distinguished with the still higher title of Kiwámul-mulk. He, also on this occasion, ennobled with jágírs and titles fifty of his other officers and in a short time an army equal in every way to that of Sultán Kutbud-dín's was formed in Gujarát. Now followed a period of such peace and prosperity that no eye had seen nor ear heard; the soldier was independent and in comfort, the dervish careless of all but the worship of the Almighty, the merchant happy in his trade and profit, and the whole country full of peace and tranquillity, and free from anxiety and danger.

The Sultán ruled that the jágir of every Amír or soldier, who was slain in battle or who died a natural death, was continued to his son; if he had no son, half the jágir was continued to his daughter; and if he had no daughter, he settled certain allowances on the dependants of the deceased that they should have no cause of complaint against the Government. They say that, on a certain occasion, some one represented that the son of a certain deceased Amír was not fit for his jágir. The Sultan replied, "Never mind, the jágir will make him fit." After this no one ever made such objections, and, in truth, the secret of the content of his subjects was that he never confiscated jágírs, except for oppression, and he never departed from the rules of Government. During the reign of Mehmúd Shah the Martyr¹ certain of his economical ministers in checking the accounts of the revenues of the kingdom found them to have increased ten-fold, the income of no village being less than double or treble its former revenue; and the merchants also benefited by the safety of the roads throughout his entire dominions. The cause of the comfort of the religious orders in his time was that the Sultán himself respected that holy class, and caused the greatest regularity to be observed in the remission to them of their yearly stipends. He also constructed for the comfort of his subjects, refectories and lofty saráis for travellers, and imposing collegiate structures and mosques like Paradise; and the reason of the thriving condition of the cultivators was that the Sultán besides being very just and impartial, tolerated neither oppression nor injury. Great and poor are agreed in this that, among the Sultáns of Gujarát either before or after him, there was no one like Mehmúd Begdá. He conquered the fort of Júnágad and the country of

¹ The author probably means Mehmúd III. of Gujarát.

Sorath and the fort of Chānpāner and its neighbourhood, and, having abolished the customs of the infidels, he introduced in those countries the laws of Islām. The merits of all the good actions that will be done up to the Day of Judgment by those he converted to Islām will be laid to the credit of his account, as says the tradition of the Prophet : " He who establishes a virtuous practice, to him is due its reward as also the rewards of those that follow it after him." Although Sultān Bahādūr, his grandson, was a greater conqueror, he was not so masterful an administrator as Sultān Mehmūd Begdā, who was unrivalled for excellence in both.

Praise be to Allah ! the period in which Sultān Mehmūd lived was an epoch singularly fertile in the production of great men. In Khurāsān, contemporaneously, with him ruled the great Husein Mirzā with the unrivalled Amīr Ali Shēr as his minister, and the poet Maulānā Jāmī¹ as the most brilliant of men of letters. The throne of Delhi was graced by Sikandar, the son of Bahlūl Lōdi, with the gifted Miyān Bahlu Khān as his vazīr. Māndu had a ruler like Sultān Giyāsuddīn, the son of Mehmūd Khilji, and the Dakhan, a king like Mehmūd Bahmani, with Khājā Jahān as his minister. To say that the soul of the great belligerent Sultān Mehmūd of Ghazni had sought a second habitation in the body of Sultān Mehmūd Begdā, would not be an exaggeration, as all the deeds and actions of the latter bore a striking resemblance with those of the former. They say that on the day of his coronation Khudāwand Khān Malik Ālīm, who was much attached to the Sultān and was a man of a high order of scholarship, handed over to the Sultān a copy of the poems of Hāfiz (a book which is consulted for auguries and omens) which the Sultān opening at hap hazard found that it had opened at the page containing the ode beginning with the following verses :—

"Thou whose proud form adorns the kingly gown,² Whose pearls refulgent grace the imperial crown," being a eulogy on a great, brave, and virtuous king, whose deeds would throw into the shade those of Alexander the Great. After the recital of these verses the Debīr or a Secretary of the Sultān got up and read verses ; the last of which complained of the emptiness of his wine cup and called to witness the Mohtasīb (a censor morum whose offensive office furnishes a source of endless merriment to the bacchanal Sūfi in the Poetry of Musalman countries). As the Mohtasib of the city was also present and the reciter unwittingly extending his hand pointed him out the felicitousness of the recital was much welcomed, and drew applause and dresses of honour from many of the nobles especially Illadāw and Khan and his son who were men of an elegant scholarly taste. All the royal and the faithful nobles present were much gratified at this highly auspicious prophecy, and were presented with valuable dresses of honour and gifts.

¹ Sir Olive Bayley (Gujarāt 168) calls him Maulana Hāji.

² ای قباى پادشاهى راست بر بالاي تو . : تاج شاهى را فروغ از لولوي لالاي تو

It is said that corn has never been so cheap in Gujarāt as it was during the reign of Sultán Muhmūd. Like the armies of Jonghiz the Moghal, his army never suffered defeat. He ordered that none of his soldiers should ever borrow money at interest, and he appointed a separate treasurer who should make advances to whomever was in need, and should recover them according to agreement, and owing to this the money-lenders were rather straitened; further, his men thought less of them than dogs, and the king used to say: "If the Musalmāns borrow money at interest, how shall they be able to fight?"

The great abundance of fruit trees, such as pomegranates, khirnis (Momusops-Indica), Jāmbus (Eugenia-jambolana), Gūlars (Ficus-glomerata), cocoa-nuts (Cocos-mucifera), and Bels (Ægle-marmelos), and Mhowras (Bassia-latifolia), and Banyans (Ficus-bengalensis), Āonlas (the shrubby Phyllanthus or Phyllanthus Emblica) which are to be found in Gujarāt, arose from the attention and fostering efforts of this Sultán. He had such a consideration for roadside trees, that he used to encourage their plantation by giving prizes to the planters, and that whenever he used to see any shade-tree such as a Banyan (Ficus bengalensi), a Nīm (Elia azadirachta), a Pīpal (Ficus religiosa), he used to pull in rein there, call for its owner, and talk to him for a while with great condescension and kindness, and ask him whence he watered the tree. If the owner said that water was distant and he was put to trouble in carrying it a long way, he used to get a well or a step-well built there, out of the State Treasury. He used also to promise that the planters might be sure of reward in proportion to the number of trees they planted. The "Paradise Garden," which is five kós in length and one in breadth, was built, and the Shaībān garden was founded by the Sultán. In the same way, if he saw any shop or house empty or in ruins, he used to send for the owners and ask the reason of their being in that condition, and giving pecuniary assistance, if required, used to order its construction. The whole country of Gujarāt was such that, the Koranic verse, "he who enters it is safe," descriptive of Mecca, applied to it.¹

In the latter part of his life, the Sultán used to devote the greater part of his time to devotion and penitence, and tears of mortification and the prayers,² called the "Impregnable Fort," were ever on his lips. One day Malik Sárang, the founder of the suburb of that name near Ahmedábád, asked him: "Why, with the proud possession of such a kingdom as that of Gujarát, do you wail and cry?" The Sultán said: "Oh insensate, my patron Sháh Álam used to tell me that the end of Mehmúd would be "Mehmúd" (محمود) a play upon words, meaning "good"). Now, however, much I strive for such an end I do not see in myself any worthiness for it. The stream of my life floweth on fast, and what hath flowed returneth not; hinc illæ lacrimæ! alas, I knew not the Master's worth when he was by! At last the Sultán joined himself with Sheikh Sirájud-din, who was a perfect Saint of the age and was by his teaching and direction saved from this delirious and repining condition of the mind.

One day the Sultán hearing the praises of the saint Sheikh Sirájud-din, the apostle of Kutbe Álam and a great reclainer of the misguided from Aminul-mulk asked that nobleman to meet him that night at the palace postern on the river Sábarmati. Aminul-mulk did so, and the Sultán issuing asked him to lead him to the monastery of the Saint which he did, the Sultán following alone, with only a sword under his arm, and on foot. Reaching the monastery of the Sheikh, Aminul-mulk went in to announce the Sultán, who was called in, and going in saw the saint seated on a crazy old cot on which, in obedience to his invitation, after saluting the Sheikh and shaking hands with him, the Sultán took his seat at the foot. After a while, he with great sincerity of heart asked him to show him the way to rectitude and the favour of God, and freedom from the passions. The Dervish told him it was extremely difficult for a layman, especially for a king, to devote his heart and soul to heaven. But the Sultán with honest singleness of purpose said he was ready even to give up his royal dignity for his soul's good; and the Dervish assured of his earnestness said that though one hour of his righteous life as a king was equal to an year of devotion as a Dervish,³ he would send him his advice in the course of the following day on which he was to act without doubt or question. The

¹ Mandakhalahú Kána Ámina. Kuran chap.

² These prayers consist of a repetition of wishes for peace of the soul of the Prophet together with some other stereotyped words.

³ The Saint here repeats the famous lines of Sa'ádi expressive of the proverb: "the cow does not make the monk."

Sultán entrusted the duty of conveying this message to Amínul-mulk, and went away. The message with which the Dervish charged that nobleman, with his subsequent conduct, was of a nature to put to the severest test the devotion and faith of the Sultán for holy men: He asked for a high place in the royal service near the Sultán's person, the place of the chief officer of Revenue and Accounts. The Sultán without his belief being in the least shaken gave him the place and next day the Sheikh girding a sword and mounting a horse went to court and was formally invested with the dress of honour. After performing his duties for sometime the Sheikh requested the Sultan to be given quarters near him, and this also being done he came and lived near the Sultan's private apartments. The people of Ahmedabád lost all faith in the Saint and began to speak of him openly as a designing imposter, but the Sheikh made light of it. The real motive of the Sheikh in all this was to at once try the Sultán's faith as well as to give him spiritual teaching, unobserved by the world. In a short time when he thought the Sultan had made himself perfect, he asked his leave with a request never to seek him again and disappeared. Mercy of Allah on such dervishes! The Sultán was the spiritual follower of Sheikh Rehmatulláh, the son of Sheikh Azizulláh, the Resigner in God, and the mausoleum of this Saint is in the suburb of Sheikhpora which is said to have been founded by him.

Though illiterate, the Sultán's mind from his constant association with learned men was stored with such a rich stock of useful knowledge, colloquial and historical (both sacred and profane) legal, poetical and biographical that, except scholars, nobody in speaking with him could say he was unlettered. His notes and queries on learned matters were highly ingenious. Ibni Afras, the translator of the book "Shifa," has mentioned several instances of the Sultan's quickness in deciding difficult points of law. This is one of them copied verbatim. There is a tradition to the effect that the Prophet (on whom be peace!) cursed a boy who passed before him during his prayers and thereby vitiated the prayers. The boy at once became a cripple and could not move a foot. Some people consider this tradition weak, other authorities do not. Those who lay it down to be unsound argue that the passing of a boy before the Prophet could not vitiate his prayers, and that the Prophet would never curse a child in non-age. Those that consider the tradition valid corroborate it by the testimony of Zeid, the son of Ómar, who stated that he saw in Tábuć (in Syria) a cripple who said his name was Yezíd, the son of Mehrán, and admitted having become a cripple by the curse of the Prophet for having passed before the Prophet while in prayers in his boyhood. The Sultan, stating that the curse of the Prophet, like the destruction by the Prophet Elias of the boat, was, by Divine inspiration and command, laid the tradition down as valid. This was admitted by all the learned men as a just decision and has found place in the book Shafá.

In A. H. 864 (A. C. 1460) the Sultán went with a force to hunt at Kapadwanj, and in the adjoining plain reviewed his army and prayed and after the reading of the Fátihá,¹ said: "If God wills in the ensuing year I will found a new city." As at the time of the reading of the Fátihá the face of the Sultán was turned in the direction of Sorath, the wise men of the time guessed that the Sultán desired the conquest of Fort Gírnár, and after this he returned from Kapadwanj to Ahmedábád. In A. H. 865 (A. D. 1461) he marched from Ahmedábád and encamped on the bank of the river Khári. At this camp a letter arrived from Nizám Sháh, son of Humáyun Sháh Dakhni, to the effect that Sultán Mehmúd Khilji at the instigation of Nizámul-mulk Ghori, who, in the time of Humáyun Sháh, had fled to Mehmúd Khilji, with a numerous army had entered and commenced to ravage the Dakhan. That he had, therefore, advanced forty kós from his city, and was awaiting him at the Gháts, and besought aid from Sultán Mehmúd. The Sultán receiving the letter from the Dakhan started and reached the country of Nazarbár; at this camp he received another letter from Nizám Sháh to the effect that, though the Sultán Mehmúd Khilji had shown great activity in his operations, he on his part had not spared fighting, had defeated the enemy's army and had captured 50 of his elephants. But that the Dakhan army became engaged in plunder, when Sultán Mehmúd attacked them with 12,000 horses. At this time, said Nizam Shah, he had but few men, still he fought bravely, but that at length Sikandar Khán withdrew him from the field to Bídár from the battle, and brought him into the city of Nazarbár. He added that Sultán Mehmúd had besieged the city of Bídár, and that now without the aid of the Sultán there was no mode of escape. He, therefore, trusted the Sultán would cast his glance like the rising sun in his direction, and dispel the darkness of oppression. On Sultán Mehmúd, king of Gujarát, marching with a large army to the aid of Nizám Sháh by the way of Burhánpur, the Khilji raised the siege of Bídár and returned to his own country by way of Gondwánáh. At this time the Rájáh of Gondwánáh, who was with him, said : " This road is one where there is little water, and the jungle is very dense, and the passes are narrow ;" but the Sultán Mehmúd Khilji through fear of Sultán Mehmúd Gujaráti chose this road, and at once marched performing two days' march in one day. They say that he came to such a place that from want of water 6,000 of his men became food for jackals and vultures, and when he entered the Gondwánáh passes, the Gonds rose against him, and plundered his baggage. Thus after a hundred misfortunes he issued from the mountains and reached his own country. He now caught, and slew the Gond Rájáh, though the Rájáh pleaded that he had warned him. At length when Sultán Mehmúd Gujaráti reached Thánesar which is under Burhánpúr, he reviewed his army. It is related from authentic sources, that in the time of no king of Gujarát was there so large and well equipped an army, nor had any of the kings of his time ever sent such forces in any direction. He had in this expedition seventy-three nobles and had devoted the whole revenue of Gujarát to the pay of his army, and had given up his own crown villages for four years as a contribution to the enlarged expenses of the army, defraying his personal expenses from the treasure left by former kings. Of this treasure also it is related that he spent two-thirds in rewards and food supplies for the army during these four years.

¹ The repetition of the first 'Sura,' or Chapter of the Kuraan, as a requiem of peace for the soul of the Prophet.

When Mehmúd Khilji returned to his own country, Nizám Sháh sent his Vakils to the Sultán, and they spared nothing in thanking and praising him for his aid and requested him to return to his own country. The Sultán marched thence for his own country.

Afterwards in A. H. 867 (A. C. 1463) Sultán Mehmúd Khilji with 90,000 horse marched to the Dakhan and ravaged and laid the country waste as far as Daulatábád. Nizám Sháh again asked for aid, and the Gujarát Sultán acceding marched to Nazurbár. Sultán Mehmúd Khilji hearing this, returned to his own country by the way he had come; and the Sultán also returned to his capital, and thence wrote to Sultán Mehmúd Khilji that it was not the part of good men to harass the lands of Islám—" You should," he added, " therefore dismiss such ideas from your mind for the future, but if you again invade the Dakhan, I will on this side attack Mándú, take therefore your choice." After this Sultán Mehmúd Khilji gave up attacking the Dakhan." Afterwards in A. H. 868 (A. C. 1464) Sultán Mehmúd Gujaráti sent for a large number of damascened swords from Telingán for war, and in A. H. 869 (A. C. 1465) he marched against the Bárodar mountains, conquered the rock fortress and returned to his own country. In A. H. 870 (A. C. 1466) he went to Ahmednagar for hunting, and on the road Bahaúl-mulk-bin Alaf Khán, also called Aládáud-dín-bin Sohráb, killed without cause, Adam the armour-bearer of the Sultán and fled, and hid himself. Malik Háji Imádul-mulk and Malik Kálú Azdul-mulk were ordered to go and capture, and bring him wherever he might be. Malik Háji and Malik Kálu, being helpless, captured Bahául-mulk and persuaded two of his followers to go to the Sultán and say they were guilty and Bahául-Mulk innocent, promising that they would only be imprisoned and afterwards released. They did so, and the Sultán at once ordered them to be killed. When, however, he found out the deceit which had been practised upon him, he caused both the Maliks to be put to death, and after this no causeless murders were committed during his reign. He conferred on Malik Bahá-ud-dín Ikhtiyar-ul-Mulk the title of Imád-ul-Mulk and honoured him with the post of vazír.

IN A. H. 877 (A. C. 1472) MEHMÚD SHÁH CONQUERS GIRNAR, AND CONVERTS RÁO MANDLIK, THE FIST ATTACK BEING MADE
IN A. H. 871 (A. C. 1466).

It is so related that in the time of Sultán Mehmúd Begdá the Rájá, Ráo Mandlik of Girnár and Junágadh, had become so haughty and insolent with the Musalmán Sovereign of Gujarát that he did not consider himself in any way inferior to that potentate. He considered his rock-castle of Girnár and his fort of Junágadh impregnable, and he had under him a country like that of Sorath in which centre all the beauties and merits of Málwá, Khandesh and Gujarát. The ports of Gujarát receive many products that are first imported by the ports of Sorath. Purity of God! It is the same, once prosperous country that now, on account of the constant change of its governors, has become the land of marauding free-booters, swindling merchants, charlatanic priests, grasping land-owners, and ragged soldiers. The free-booters of Sorath used always to harry the frontiers of Gujarát. Sultán Ahmed I., the founder of Ahmedábád, had unsuccessfully attempted the conquest of Sorath. For this reason the Súltán always felt a great longing to conquer Sorath, but with great deliberation on account of the great strength of its fortresses and their great capacities of storage, &c. At last, he after consulting the omens, in A. H. 871 (A.C. 1467), undertook the expedition.

1. So my MS. Sir Olive Bayley has "Báwar." Ferishtah—[Persian text II. 386] calls it Bárúd, and places it between Gujarát and the Konkan, and describes as a strong hill-fort. The Bombay Gazetteer History of Gujarát (35), correctly, calls it Barúr. Sir Olive Bayley's note (Gujarát 178) on this fortress is interesting.

Be it known that there is a mountain surrounding Gírnár on all sides but the northern. On the south there is a pass (a valley?) between two mountains, twelve kós in extent, and in this valley there is a jungle so dense that a horse cannot pass through it; it has numerous caves and it is uninhabitable, except for birds and beasts and a tribe of infidels, called Khánts, who bear a greater resemblance to wild beasts than men. They dwell on the sides of the mountain, and, if any army march against them, they run away and hide themselves in the caverns. In the forest there are such trees that few know their names. There are also many fruit-trees in the mountains: like the Mango (Mangifera Indica); the Khirni (Mimusops Indica), the Jámbool (Eugenia jumbolándá), the Gúlar (Ficus glomerata), the Imli (Tamarendus Indica), and the Áonla (Phyllanthus emblica), &c. Near the foot of the mountain westwards, about three arrows-throw runs the Wanthali¹ road, leading to the castle of Junágadh, constructed wholly of stone. There are three gates to the castle, one facing the east, the other the west, and the third the north. As one enters the gate, facing the north, he has to enter another gate facing the west. The derivation of the name of Junágadh is so given by the people of Sorath, that in former times the capital of the country of Sorath was the village of Wanthali, five kós to the west of Junágadh. The country between Junágadh and this place was so densely wooded that neither horse nor man could pass through it. Many of that Rájáh's ancestors had ruled there, when one day a wood-cutter crossed the distance by accident with the greatest difficulty, and reached a place where he saw a stone-well with an old gateway. He went back, and reported to the Rájáh what he had seen. The Rájáh ordered a clearance of the wood between the city and the gate, and asked of the architects and historians of his time to ascertain the name of the old city, but all of them expressed their inability to do so, and the place was called Junágadh, the old fortress (city), as nobody could say the date of its building or the name of its founder. There are two wells in the old fort called Noḡhan and Angoliá, and two step-wells, one called Ari and another Brájári.

¹ A village about eight miles south-west of the town of Júnágadh.

The Rájáh of the land was called Rao Mandlik, and it is noted in Hindu histories that his ancestors had ruled over the country from father to son for nineteen hundred years. In this long period the city was once taken by Sultán Muhammad Tughlak, emperor of Delhi, and once by Sultán Ahmed, the son of Muhammad Sháh Sultán of Gujarát, but the Hindus subsequently gathering force re-took the place from the deputies of these two Muslim powers.

It is said that when Sultán Mehmúd determined to take the fortresses of Girnár and Junágadh he ordered his treasurer to take stores of ready money in gold with him to the amount of fifty millions and ordered his Kúrbegi (or keeper of the royal armoury) to take with him one thousand seven hundred swords of Egypt and Yemen and Maghrebi and Khurásáni and Alleymand on whose handles was from four to six seers of gold; and three thousand and three hundred Ahmedábád swords with silver hilts, weighing from four to five seers, and seventeen hundred daggers (Khanjár) and double-edged daggers (Jámdhar), with gold on their handles, weighing from two seers and a half to three seers, and he ordered his master of the horse (Akhtahbegi) to take with him two thousand Arabian and Turkish horses with gold trappings. In short, when the Sultán besieged the fort of Junágadh, the infidels of those parts placed their families and provisions in a defile, called Maháilah (Mahá-bala!) which was very strong position and determined to fight to the death. One day Tughlak Khán, a prince of Sindh, said to the Sultán: "The Maháilah is a very impregnable place, and no army has ever penetrated it, and conquered it." The Sultán replied, "If God wills I will conquer it." One day the Sultán, mounted as if for hunting, went in the direction of the Mahailáh. When the Hindus saw but a small party, they were careless and thought it would not attack them. Suddenly, the Sultán came upon them, and the infidels after a short fight fled and went into the jungle. When the army heard that the Sultán was engaged, they followed him, and leaving their horses outside the defile, they entered it on foot, and the great part of the families and provisions of the Hindus fell into the hands of the army, and the Sultán returned victorious to his quarters, and occupied himself in furthering the siege. They say that in the next four days' siege the Sultán distributed the fifty millions of ready money in gold and the swords and daggers, in presents to the soldiers, so that they should strive strenuously to conquer the fortress and should dismiss laziness and carelessness from their minds. He also sent out powerful detachments to ravage the country of Sorath, and countless plunder fell into their hands. Ráo Mandlik now sent his agents and showed great humility. The Sultán thought it best to suspend the operations of the siege of the fortress for that year and returned to his own country. In A. H. 872 (A. C. 1468) the Sultán heard that the Ráo Mandlik, when he visited his idol temples did so in great state and splendour and with a golden umbrella over him. The Sultán was seized with kingly jealousy and he caused to be got ready 40,000 horses and many elephants, and ordered them to take from him his umbrella and regalia and if he refused to give them up, to lay waste his country with fire and sword. As soon as Rájá Mandlik heard this, he sent the umbrella and ornaments with fitting submission to the Sultán. The army returned and were honoured with kissing the Sultán's feet. The Sultán bestowed these ornaments on his musicians. After this in A. H. 873 (A. C. 1469) news was received of the death of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji and of the accession of his eldest son Gheíasud-dín to the throne. Several of the Amírs represented to the Sultán that after the death of Sultán Ahmed, Sultán Mehmúd Khilji had endeavoured to conquer Gujarát, and that now if the Sultán wished to conquer Málwá it would fall easily into his hands. But the Sultán said, "To covet the country of a brother Muhammadan, whether he be alive or dead, does not befit a Musalman."

In A. H. 874 (A. C. 1469) the Sultán again sent an army to Sorath, and having plundered and ravaged the country it returned. Afterwards the Sultán resolved to conquer Gírnár and turning his face towards the country of Sorath, started thither by rapid marches. On hearing this the Ráo Mandlik without being sent for, and without any message, came into the presence of the Sultán and said, "Whatever service the Sultán may command, this slave will be ready to perform with his life. Without my having committed any fault why do you endeavour to ruin me." The Sultán said, "What crime is greater than infidelity! If you desire safety acknowledge the unity of God, and become a Musalmán with a true heart that I may entrust to you other dominions in addition to your own, else I will destroy you." When the Ráo Mandlik saw how the case stood, he fled that very night and entered the fort. While he was absent with the Sultán, his officers had collected provisions and strengthened the forts of Junágadh and Girnár. One day the Sultán reached the foot of the mountain, and the infidels poured forth as numerous as ants and locusts from the fort and commenced to fight. After much fighting they were defeated, and entered the lofty fortress of Girnár. In this way the fight went on for two days. On the third day the Sultán went himself to the battle, and fought from morn till eve with the infidels with both sword and spear. That day the soldiers of the Sultán were more successful, the infidels fled, and re-entered the lofty fortress. The Sultán divided the trenches amongst his men, and appointed each Amír to a place. The infidels every day came from one quarter or another, and fought. One day some Hindus came suddenly into the trench of Álam Khán Fárúki, one of the famous nobles, slew him and departed. The Sultán made great efforts in being on the alert, and the Hindus became straitened. A Waniá, named Withal, Ráo Mandlik's minister, consulting with the garrison of the fortress, said: "This time Sultán Mehmúd will not depart without conquering. It is better for us to go to the higher fortress of Girnár than to remain in Junágadh, because it is stronger than this one, and has plenty of provisions." The garrison agreed with him, and they sent ambassadors to the Sultán, and said: "If the Sultán of the world will spare our lives and will not hinder our families, we will take our families and stores, and come out of the fort, and surrender it to the Sultán's servants." The Sultán replied, "Be it welcome to you." They then taking their families and stores, made for the lofty fort of Girnár. The Sultán coming to know of this, ordered his army to plunder them.¹ The army ran in pursuit and reaching the middle of the mountain commenced the fight. That day many Muhamínadans became martyrs, and they sent many Hindus to their last account, but the Hindus managed to convey their families into the lofty fortress, and every day issuing thence, they gave battle. After a long time when their stores ran short, and they were reduced to extremities of privation, they prayed for quarter. The Sultán agreed to their prayers on condition of their adopting the faith of Islám. Ráo Mandlik now issued forth from the fort, received the honour of kissing the Sultán's feet, and handed over the keys of the fort to the Sultán's servants. This happened in A. H. 877 (A. C. 1472). The Sultán recited the creed¹ of Islám, the Ráo repeated it and saved himself from the flame of the Sultán's wrath which was like the fire of hell. After his conversion, the Ráo used to say : " Before I met the king Sháh Sham-suddín Bukhári" (who lies buried, in the neighbourhood of the town of Unáh,) "had attracted me towards Islám. Now by the kindness of the Sultán I am exalted by the profession of the faith with the tongue while believing in it with the heart." But they say that whenever he remembered Girnár and his former kingly state, he used to weep copiously.

¹ Sultán Mehmúd's conduct was not singular. Deliberate and systematic breach of faith with unbelievers was accounted a virtue by Muslim rulers of Mohamad's ilk, and has given birth to the Gujarati proverb: "It is foolish to trust the word of one whose stomach contains another's flesh! (meaning a flesh-eater). Jena-pet-mán parko-más, Ténosbo-vishváis." The Muslim rulers justified their conduct by the tradition of the Prophet: "Al harbá Khadatun—War is fraud."

This is what the author of the Táríkhí Bahádur-Sháhi says, but I have heard from reliable men of Gujarát that the cause of the Sultán being induced to make this last conquest of Júnágadh and Girnár was different. It was this: The Wánia Witthal was the vazír of Ráo Mandlik, and the administration of all the affairs of the Ráo was in his hands, and he turned against him. The cause was that the Wánia had a wife of the name of Mohini who for peerless beauty was renowned in her time. One day Ráo Mandlik saw the sun of her beauty and became excessively enamoured of her. The end of the matter was that after much endeavour he obtained possession of her. This infamous intrigue being discovered by her husband he placed the saw at the root of the power and kingdom of the Ráo. Repressing the mortification of his heart, he represented with great show of zealous concern to the Ráo, that the provisions in the fort were old and had become unfit for consumption. He asked orders to replace the old provisions with fresh ones. The Ráo said, " Why do you not do so?" Beginning to remove the provisions, he secretly sent a man to the Sultán to tell him that the fortress was emptied of stores, and that if the Sultán would now make an attempt to conquer the fort, he could easily capture it. The Sultán was delighted and started at once for Júnágadh and Girnár, and having arrived by forced marches conquered both the forts. God knows the truth of the affair.

Some say that the cause of Ráo Mandlik adopting Islám was that when he descended from the fortress, and came to the Sultán, the Sultán took him with him to Ahmedábád. One day he went to Rasúlábád which was the residence and is now the place of burial of Sháh-i-Alam. He saw that many elephants, horses and men were collected before his house, and he asked what amír dwelt there? They replied it was the Darbár of the Sháh-i-Álampanáh, the king who was the refuge of the world. He asked, whose servant was he, and who paid him? They replied: "He was a dependent of Alláh alone." He asked, "whence then has he obtained all these things of royal state?" They replied, "God gave them to him." He asked if he could have an interview with him and went and saw him. As soon as his eyes fell on the face of Sháh Alam he said, "Tell me what is necessary to be said by one who wishes to become a Muhammadan. The Hazráf Sháh recited the creed. The Ráo repeated it with the tongue and admitted the truth of it with his heart. In short from his visit to the house of that good man he obtained the honour of admission into Islám.

¹ The creed is : Lá-iláha illal-láh, Muhammad-ur-rasúl-ulláh. There is no God but Alláh, Muhammad is his Prophet.

At the time of Sultán Mehmúd's siege of Júnágad there were but few cannon and muskets in the higher fort. The garrison fought sometimes with stones and sometimes with arrows and muskets. Fighting for a long time in this manner with great vigour and energy, the Sultán's sustained efforts to conquer the fort failing to open the door of victory, he became much grieved, and wrote to Khudáwand Khán, who was the adept of his day in the science of astrology and who having resigned the post of vazír, had retired to his own house, in Ahmedábád: "Although I don't fail in fighting strenuously, yet up to the present time I see no hope of victory, though I am determined either to clasp the bride of Victory in my arms or die a martyr." Khudáwand Khán wrote in reply, "Send me an account of the mode of your attack, and where your trenches are, and who is in command over each." This was sent accordingly. The Khán altered the position of the trenches and wrote the names of the amírs who should be placed in command in each, and requested the Sultán to make an attack on the fortress on a certain day. The Sultán acted according to the writing of the Khán, and on the appointed day God opened the door of victory to him.

After this victory the Sultán sent to the cities and towns of Gujarát for great sayads and noted wise men and kázis, and officers acquainted with the Muhammadan faith to enforce the laws of Islám, and settled them in Júnágadh, and in the towns under it and he himself remained there, and commenced to populate the town, and to repair the city-walls of Jahánpanáh, and built lofty palaces, and ordered his amírs to each of them build a residence for himself. In the course of time a city was built that was a twin to Ahmedábád. The Sultán named it Mustafábád. Thus was Sorath brought without any opposition under his rule, and all the Hindu chiefs and land holders with humility and submission and without demand or importunity brought and paid him the tribute due from them.

News was now received that Jeysingh, son of Gangdás, Rájá of Chámpánér, harboured the discontented men of the Baroda and Dabhoi sarkárs and purposed to rebel, and having made friendship with the king of Mándu expected assistance from him. The discontented about Ahmedábád, as a melon takes colour from another melon¹ became also ready to rebel. The king appointed Malik Jamálud-din his armour-bearer as faujdar over the great city of Ahmedábád, and its dependencies with the title of Muháfiz Khán. The above mentioned Malik made such excellent arrangements that theiving and high-way robbery became extinct, and the citizens and villagers slept with open doors, and the merchants opened their loads on the roads and stages. Fortune smiled on Muháfiz Khán. His son² took tribute from those turbulent people who had never paid it before. After some days the Sultán entrusted to him the entire government of the city of Ahmedábád. This service also he performed in a manner which met with approval. After a few days he became viceroy, and performed these duties also well. He was now invested with the office of vazír of the kingdom and was allowed to retain his old posts and dignities of which the agents of the Malik performed the necessary work. This Muháfiz Khán was grand-father of the author of the "Tárikh-i-Bahádur Sháhi." In short, the Sultán also appointed an amír to bring into order the country of Baroda, and he appointed Malik Bahául-mulk styled Imád-ul-mulk to the thánedári of Sankheda, and he entrusted to Malik Sárang Kiwámul-mulk the Thánedári of Norkha, and that of Dákhna to Táj Khán, son of Súlár. The appointment of these posts prevented Jeysingh from rebellion. In A. H. 876 (A. C. 1471) Ráo Mandlik was dignified with the title of Khán Jahán and a jágir was bestowed on him, and the golden idols which had been taken from his temples were sold and their proceeds distributed among the soldiers.

After this the Sultán made an incursion into Sindh, and in one day marched sixty-one kos, and plundered the countries of the zamín-dárs, adjacent to Sindh. The land in these parts is salt and in the rain it remains under water. One portion of the country is an arm of the salt sea and the tides of the sea flow over it. Its breadth in some places is six kos and in others greater or less. Its water is always salt and the land is not fit for cultivation, and except fish and salt, produces nothing. They say that in this foray there were only six hundred horse with the Sultán. The zamindárs of these parts of Sindh, the Sumrás and the Sodhás¹ on hearing of the Sultán's arrival, at the head of twenty-four thousand horse, took up a strong position. But on seeing the Sultán's army, they sent their agents to him agreeing to become Muhammadans. The Sultán refrained from their slaughter, and said if they wished to become Muhammadans they should act according to the precepts of Islám, and give up inter-marriage with the Hindus, and send some of their chiefs to attend on the Sultán; that their chiefs should accompany the Sultán to Júnágadh, where, having learned the precepts of Islám, they might return to their families and instruct them. They agreed with fervour, and came with fitting presents, and were allowed to kiss the Sultán's feet, and accompanied the victorious return of the Sultán to Júnágadh. The Sultán handed them over to the learned in religion for instruction. Some of them after they had acquired knowledge of Islám returned to their country, others being charmed with the Sultán's favour remained with him, giving up their homes and families and becoming in course of time worthy of confidence and advancement.

¹ All growing ripe at once.—An Urdu proverb.

² Ferishtah (Persian text-II. 390) calls him Malik Khizr and says he exacted tribute from the Rájás of Vágad, Idar and Sirohi.

In A. H. 877 (A. C. 1472) the Sultán marched with a strong army to chastise the lawless tribes of Sindh, with 900 horsemen, each with two horses. He reached Sarpalah, and there fought with, and conquered 40,000 Hindu zamindárs of Sindh who were skilled archers, and having captured their wives and children brought them to Júnágadh.

In this year (A. C. 1472) Sultán Mehmúd conquered Jagat and Sankhodwára.² The cause of this conquest was that Mauláná Mehmúd of Samarkand who was distinguished for his great scientific and poetic attainments had embarked from the coast of the Dakhan to go to Samarkand. He was on his way captured with his property and family by the pirates of Sankhodwára who brought him and his two sons to the shore, and set them adrift keeping with them his women and property. The Mulla after a hundred dangers and misfortunes betook himself to the

¹. According to Ferishtah (Persian text II. 390-91) these people (more probably Jádejas) lived in Katohh which Ferishtah, erroneously places in the limits of Sindh. He represents the people as wild and worshippers of the elements. The next expedition was against the Jats and Baluchis of Sindh proper. The author erroneously calls them Hindu zamindars of Sindh.

². Dwárka (north latitude 22°15', east longitude 69°) on the north-western shore of Káthiawar, famous for its temple of Krishna.

Court of Sultán Mehmúd. They say that the sons of the Mulla were so very young, that they were unable to travel on foot. The Mulla was not strong enough to carry both of them at once on his shoulder or his hip. He therefore used to carry one of the boys on his shoulder for a short distance, and then to set him down, and returning, he used to carry the other and bring him along. In this manner in several days he travelled seventy kos and arrived in the presence of the Sultán with grieved heart and flowing eyes, and so repeated his tale of wrong and oppression that the recital touched with pain the heart of the Sultán, and of all present. The Sultán asked for all the details, and with tearful eyes and a thousand sighs the Mulla related all his sufferings. Although previous to this the Sultán had felt a desire to conquer Jagat and the island of Sankhodwár, the most famous places of Hindu worship the difficulty of the road to Jagat and the wildness of the neighbourhood and the strength of the Island of Sankhodwár, used to make him hesitate. The Sultán was considering about it, and was thinking how it might be managed, when this occurrence happened, and the new desire strengthened the old one. The Sultán became restless and said, "As long, God willing, as I do not punish these Hindus, I shall feel averse to take rest." He consoled Mulla Mehmúd, and showed great pity for his misfortunes, and sent him to Ahmedábád. On the 17th of the month of Zilhajj, he marched against Jagat, and reached it by forced marches. The Hindus fled to the Island of Sankhodwára. He then plundered Jagat and cast down the buildings thereof, and destroyed the idol temples, and broke the idols to pieces, and thence he pitched his camp at Adhámrá, which is about ten kos from Jagat on the sea-shore opposite the Island of Sankhodwára. The author of the Mehmúd Sháhí writes that the place was an abode of snakes, so that no one in the army slept that night for fear of them, and there was no tent in which a snake was not found. It is said that they killed seven hundred snakes in the suite of tents belonging to the Sultán alone. One of the marvels of this country is this, that on the 9th of the month of Asádh, which is the commencement of the monsoon, from the eleventh to the fourteenth, which the Hindus called the Igiaras, Báras, Teras, Chawdas, and Púranmashi, birds as big as Mainás of a special appearance, come from the sea and perch on the top of the idol temple which is in the village of Mádhupur on the sea-shore in the Mángrol district. Many of them die and the survivors take to wing after about two hours. When these have flown away, the dwellers there pick up the dead ones, and guess from their feathers whether or not their monsoon will be favourable. If they see that the black feathers preponderate in the head and tail and there is a white patch in the middle of the bird's body they guess that there will be more rain at the commencement and end of the monsoon, and less in the middle, and if it be black in the middle, and white at the two extremities, they guess that there will be more rain in the middle of the season and less at the beginning and end; and thus when black preponderates, excess of rain, and where white, want of it, is prognosticated. If the whole of the bird's body be black,¹ continuous rain, and if all white, total absence of rain is foretold. It has never happened, but that these birds came on the days of the months named, and they say also that birds of this sort used also at that time of the year to come and perch on the idol temples of Patan, Diú, and Jagat, which are situated on the sea-shore, and the inhabitants of those places similarly drew omens from them.

In short, the Hindus of the country of Jagat strengthened themselves in the Island of Sankhodwár. The Island of Sankhodwár is three kos from the shore, the sea around it being very deep. The pirates under the Rájá of Jagat were the inhabitants thereof and plundered all travellers by sea. When the Šultán saw that the Hindus of these parts had entered this island, he sent for boats from his ports and embarking in them well equipped and armed soldiers, he set out with his own special troops to conquer that island. On every side the warriors of the faith embarked in boats, and having arrived close to the island, commenced to fight. The Hindus did not fail in sending a rain of arrows and bullets and in fighting with sword and spear. At length the warriors of Islám were victorious from their superior strength, and killed the greater part of the Hindus, but some of them embarking on their ships took to flight. The Sultán entered the island and prepared boats with good seamen to chase and capture the vessels of the enemy, and the Musalman, who had scaled the temple, began, with a loud voice, to give the call to prayers, and they demolished the temple, and broke its idols. The Sultán praised God in a prayer of two rekáts,² and the family of the Mulla who were in the prison were released. They say that great plunder in rubies and pearls of fine water and costly clothes fell into the hands of the Musalmáns; and the Sultán remaining some time built a mosque, and collecting a large quantity of provisions and having handed over charge of Sánkhdwár and Jagat to Malik Túghá who had the title of Farhat-ul-mulk, himself returned to Júnágadh. The conquest of Jagat and Sankhdwár happened in A. H. 878 (A. C. 1473). The island had not been previously conquered by any king, and its conquest was now effected through the effort of the arm of Sultán Mehmúd, the Champion of the Faith.

¹ The bird called, Maina in Hindustáni, is the starling (Gracula religiosa). The only other bird resembling it is the Túlar, commonly called a Bajri bird (Pastor rosea) by Gujarat sportsmen. It has the closest resemblance to the description given here.

² Literally genuflection. The Prayers for thanksgiving are not long.

Two years after this, in A. H. 880 (A. C. 1475) Hazrat Sháh Alam, the great Saint, died. The date of his demise is gatherable from the numerical value of the letters in the word Fakhr "Glory," as also from the words A'khir-ul-Auliya—the last of the Saints.

On Friday, the tenth of Jamádul-Awwal of the above year (A. C. 1475) the Sultán arrived at Mustufá-bád, Júnágádh. By chance some of the warriors of the faith who had embarked in boats in pursuit of Bhím, son of Sagar the Rájá of Jagat, having captured the said Bhím and put fetters on him, and a collar round his neck, brought him to Mustufá-bád. The Sultán bestowed on each of his captors handsome reward, and ordered that they should bring Mulla Mehmúd of Samarkand from Ahmedábád. When Mulla Mehmúd came from Ahmedábád to Júnágadh and had an audience of the Sultán, the Sultán ordered that Bhím should be handed over to Mulla Mehmúd that he should take his revenge on him. They brought Bhím with a collar round his neck and fetters on his legs. The Mulla rose, and praised the king and his zeal for Islám and said, "By the good fortune of the king I have attained my object." Afterwards the Sultán ordered that they should take Bhím to Muháfiz Khán at Ahmedábád, that having hewed him into pieces he should affix a piece to every gate of the city as a warning to other lawless people. When they brought Bhím to Ahmedábád Muháfiz Khán acted according to this order.

After the Sultán had satisfied himself in bringing the affairs of Sorath into good order, the desire of conquering the fortress of Chámpáner which had remained dormant in his heart was re-kindled and he marched from Mustufábád to Ahmedábád. On the way he received tidings that certain Malabar pirates having fitted up several ships were harassing the ports of Gujarát. The Sultán accordingly turned to Ghogha and sent skilled sailors on vessels properly equipped to punish the Malabáris, and himself came from Ghoghá to Cambay and thence marched to Sarkhej. Paying a visit to the tomb of Sheik

Ahmed Khattu, he halted three days, and fixed the jágirs and allowances to the sons of those who had fallen or died natural deaths in this campaign. Whoever had a jágir it was confirmed to his son and he who left no son, half of his jágir was given to his daughter, and he who left no daughter had his dependants provided for in a fitting manner. During these three days the Sultán's eyes were constantly filled with tears, and he was in great grief. On seeing these signs one of his attendants said to his Majesty, "After many years the Sultán through his good fortune having conquered, forts like those of Junágadh and Gírnár, is returning to his capital. What then is the reason of thus halting at three kos from the capital, and what is the cause of this grief, while the people of Gujarát are all awaiting the arrival of the Sultán, and the families of the soldiers are anxiously expecting their arrival. This is surely an occasion for joy and gladness, and not a time for sorrow and lamentation." The Sultán replied, "I should indeed be a thoughtless and unworthy man if after arriving here in safety and comfort I do not enquire after and make provision to assuage the grief of the widows and families of those who have for ever marched away from this transitory world. It matters little if we delay for two or three days to enter the city, but to enter it without enquiring after and comforting and cooling the ardour of the grief of those whose dear ones have not returned, would be far from considerate or humane." They say that during those days Kázi Najmuddin, ruler of the religious ordinances in the city of Ahmedábád, came out to congratulate the Sultán. The Sultán heaved a piteous sigh and said: "Ah Kázi you congratulate me, but you should tell me, how those fare, whose sons and brothers have become martyrs or have died during these last five years? Had they remained in their houses how many offspring would they not have had. Just consider the sacrifice at which I have purchased my victories."

In short, after satisfying the distressed and the suffering, in the month of Shâabán the Sultán entered the great city of Ahmedábád, and in the month of Ramazán he took his army against Chámpáner. When he arrived at the village of Morámli which is of the Sáonli pargana and situated on the banks of the Mahi, he ordered a halt, and thence sent a strong force to lay waste the Chámpáner country. The army after ravaging the country returned, and when the rainy season had arrived the Sultán returned to his capital, and having passed the rains in Ahmedábád, he went in the direction of Mustafábád, and after spending sometime near Mustafábád in hunting and the chase, he returned to Ahmedábád. But the desire of the conquest of Chámpáner was never absent from his mind, and each time he left Ahmedábád for hunting, his thoughts were occupied with Chámpáner. By chance one day while hunting, he arrived on the banks of the river Wátrak, which is twelve kos from Ahmedábád in a south-easterly direction, when he heard that sometimes in that place highway robberies took place. He ordered a city to be founded on that spot named Mehmúdábád, and from that day the building of the city commenced. He ordered a strong stone-embankment to be made on the river and lofty palaces were erected on it. The building of this city bears witness to the excellence of his judgment and the quickness of his understanding, and the water of that river is very sweet and wholesome, and, in fact, were one to say that of all places in the world for beauty of climate and site none comes up to this, he would be right.

When in A. H. 835 (A. C. 1480) the Sultán went to Jánágad, he left his eldest son Ahmed Sháh in Ahmedábád, and placed Khudáwand Khán in charge of the young prince. As the army had wearied of the continual expeditions of the Sultán, some rebellious persons incited Khudáwand Khán to set up Ahmed Sháh on the throne and act treacherously to the Sultán.¹ Imádul-mulk, one of chief nobles whom they took into confidence, was a true servant and upset all their plans, by advising the nobles to beware lest this flame should become too strong. The end of this was that the Sultán became acquainted with the plot, and coming from Mustafábád to Ahmedábád he severely punished Khudáwand Khán and his like.

In A. H. 887 (A. C. 1482) except in the territory of Chámpáner there was no rain in Gujarát. Malik Asad, chief equeerry² of the Sultán, who was posted at the thanah of Morámli called also Rásúlábád, began to plunder the Chámpáner territory. When he reached the neighbourhood of the fort of Chámpáner, the Ráwal Patái, Rájá of Chámpáner, issuing from the fortress, joined battle. The Malik fought bravely, but was defeated, and most of his followers were slain and two of the Sultán's elephants with several horses which were with the Malik were seized with all their equipments by the Ráwal. On hearing this news, the Sultán was enraged and the desire of the conquest of Chámpánér became fixedly engraved on his heart.

¹ Ferishtah (Persian text, II. 395) relates this attempt of the nobles to depose Sultán Mehmúd at greater length. Mehmúd tested the loyalty of his nobles by giving out that he was determined to proceed on a pilgrimage to Maccáh. When, however, he came to know that the chief part in the conspiracy was borne by Khudá-wand Khán, the only punishment he dealt out to him was to name one of his pigeons after that nobleman.

² Or it may be, one of the chosen and exalted slave officers of the Sultán.

ACCOUNT OF THE EXPEDITION OF THE SULTÁN AGAINST THE FORT
OF CHAMPANER AND THE CONQUEST OF THE SAME BY THE KEY OF THE SWORD.

When the Sultán set out from Ahmedábád for the conquest of the Chámpánér fortress, and arrived at Baroda the Ráwál Patái became alarmed, and sent his agents to the Sultán, and made most humble submission, but, however humbly his vakils begged for pardon, their request was not acceded to, and the Sultán said, "Except the sword and dagger no other message shall pass between you and me." His agents returned to him sad and sorrowful, and related the state of affairs. The Ráwál now made up his mind to die, strengthened his fort, and prepared for the final conflict. The Sultán having arrived, laid siege to the fortress, and each day, from morn till eve battle raged between the army of Islám and the ill-fated Hindas. When some days had passed in this way, the Sultán ordered covered approaches to be constructed and engineers versed in the art, commenced to construct them. They say that they used to buy a bundle of poles for one gold *ashrafi*¹, and used it in the construction of approaches. The Ráwál Patái now sent his minister Súr to Sultán Ghiásuddín Mehmúd Khilji, requesting aid, and promising that he would give one *lák*h of tánkáhs,² each tánkáh being worth eight Akbari tánkáhs for every march that the Sultán should make from Mándu in the direction of Chámpánér. When Sultán Ghiásuddín understood this matter, he marched from Mándu to Naúlehah, a village three kos from Mándu, and became occupied in reviewing and organizing his army. When Sultán Mehmúd heard this, he entrusted the conduct of the siege to some of his nobles, and himself marched towards Mándu and making forced marches arrived at Dohad, which is situated on the frontier of Gujarát and Málwa, and encamped there.

Sultán Ghiásuddín, apprehensive of what might happen, devised a stratagem to give up the expedition : Having assembled learned men and Kázis, he informed them how Sultán Mehmúd was besieging the fortress of Chámpánér, how the Rájá of Chámpánér had sought aid from him, and he asked their opinion in the matter of helping him. They unanimously replied, "It does not behove a Muslim potentate to aid an unbeliever at such a time." Sultán Ghiásuddín on hearing this returned to his own capital, and Sultán Mehmúd also returning, came to Chámpáner. The Ráwál Patái now became hopeless of succour. The approaches had by this time been completed, and the garrison were in great straits. They burned all their property and families, and issuing from the fortress commenced to fight.¹ They say that all the garrison were slain, except the Ráwál Patái and his minister Dúngarsi, who were wounded and fell into the Sultán's hands. The Sultán caused them to be imprisoned in charge of Nizám Khán. They say that in this interview, although the Ráwál Patái was ordered to observe the ceremonial of the Sultán's court, he refused to conform to it. After five months when his wounds were healed, he was brought to the Sultán who ordered him to embrace Islám, but he refused. Finally by the order of the learned men and Kázis his head was struck off, and was exposed on a stake. His minister Dúngarsi, who was brought to a place near this stake, managed with sudden activity and resolution to snatch a sword from the hand of Sheikhan bin Kabír, one of the attendants of the Sultán, and inflicted on him a fatal blow. In the end they killed him also. They say that two daughters and one son remained of the Ráwál's family, when they brought them to the Sultán; he sent his daughters to his harem, and gave his son to Seiful-mulk to adopt as a son, and he grew up in the care of the Malik, and ultimately in the time of Sultán Muzaffar bin Mehmúd he was ennobled with the title of Nizámul-mulk, and became one of his chief nobles. The conquest of the fort of Chámpáner took place in A. H. 889 (24th November A. C. 1483-84).

¹ A gold coin from Rs. 16 to 24 in value.

² About two rupees of the present currency, a small gold or silver coin.

The climate of Chámpáner was very pleasing to the Sultán, and he made it his capital, and built there a large city which was named Muhammadábád, and a lofty mosque was constructed, and the Sultán also erected a fort round Chámpáner and called it Jahánpanáh, and the amírs, vazírs, merchants, and wánias, each one, built for himself lofty dwellings. In A. H. 890 (A. C. 1485) he caused to be laid out gardens like paradise round the city, and thus in a short time the city of Muhammadábád was so adorned and beautified that the inhabitants of Gujarát wrote the plan of Ahmedábád on the paper of forgetfulness, and agreed on Muhammadábád being without an equal. The city of Muhammadábád full of lofty dwellings, with its suburbs pleasing and free from all unpleasantness, was the residence of the great men and the dwelling of the beautiful of the time. Its gardens¹ were filled with flowers of different colours and fruit of every kind, mangoes with rich flavour, and melons of famed sweetness, and pomegranates, and grapes, and almonds of delicate flavour, and apples and the sugar-cane the mother of all sweets, fine figs and plantains and custard apples, and the Khirmi (Mimusops indica) like pale gold, with flavour like milk and sugar, being equally wholesome, and the tád (Brab palm) with its juice like milk, and its tender fruit of which sharbat is made like fábudah (a kind of flummery), and the cocoanut (Cocos nucifera) whose pulp is like halwa and its juice most agreeable and delicious, also the Jack and the Ramphal (Annona reticulata) and Kamrakh (Averrhoa carambola) and the Phálsá (Grevia Asiatica) and the Aonla (Phyllanthus emblica), each of which has its own peculiar flavour and refreshes and comforts the heart and soul. Let it not be concealed that some physicians prefer the water-melon to the sugar-cane and some say the opposite. The best kinds of sugar-canes are better than common mangoes, but the best mangoes, are better than all kinds of sugar-cane.

¹ Ferishtah (Persian text, II. 396-97) gives a more detailed account of the taking of Rávágadh.

There were also sweet-smelling flowers like red roses and sebi, the dog or China rose (Rosa glandulifera) the Chamli (Jassemine) and Champá (Michelia champaca) and Bel (Eagle marinclos) and Moghrai (Jasminum zambac) and Jáijíi (Jasminum auriculatum), and Borsal (Mimusops elengi), Kewá and Ketki (Pandanus odoratissimus), each blossom of which is like the perfumer's box and on each Narcissus is a navel as of the musk gazelle of Tártary. There are other flowers of different colours from looking at which the rust of the heart would be removed, and the eyes of the beholders would be enlightened. They say that with the fruit-trees and flowers in such plenty there was so much sandalwood to be found in the neighbourhood of Chámpánér that the people used it in house-building and it sufficed them. Blessed be Alláh! was it this Chámpánér—now is the abode of the tiger and lion? Its buildings are ruined, its inhabitants have given their property to the winds of destruction, even its waters are poisoned, and its air such that it deprives the human frame of its strength. Thorns grow now where flowers bloomed, and where gardens smiled there is jungle, dense and frowning, and there is neither name nor trace of Sandalwood trees. Of a truth the Koranic saying has here been realized: "Every thing on earth shall perish except the Face of thy Glorious and Gracious Lord."

¹ The whole description of the gardens and fruits is a tissue of poetical puns, and has been translated as closely as possible without the floweriness of the text interfering with the accuracy of the English.

They say that a man from Khurásan petitioned to the Sultán saying, "I am perfectly skilled in laying out gardens and in designing buildings. If a place be allotted to me I will lay out a garden that will gladden the Sultán's heart." The Sultán said, "Choose in the neighbourhood of the city such a place as may suit your purpose," and he ordered his officers to give him whatsoever he might require. The man laid out a nice garden, and built a small pretty fountain in it, and he contrived fountains and water-falls, an art previously unknown in Gujarát. The Sultán was very delighted on visiting it, and rewarded and was kind to its builder. At this time a Gujarati carpenter named Hálú, petitioned saying, "I also will build a garden as good as that opposite to it if you give the order." The Sultán said, "Why not if you can do it?" and Hálú in a certain time laid out a garden better than the first one. On seeing this other the Sultán was much delighted, and asked him: "The people of Gujarát are not acquainted with this art. Whence then did you learn it?" He said: "I disguised myself as an ignorant labourer and worked for the man from Khurásán, and partly by watching what he did and partly by my own skill, I acquired the knowledge." The Sultán was pleased, and praised him for his work and intelligence and perseverance, and gave him large presents with a handsome dress of honour. Several of those buildings remain to this day and that garden is well known and famous, and the people of Gujarát call this garden Hálól.¹

In short most of the elegant arts and crafts that are now common in Gujarát were copied from men of skill and genius from other countries, and Gujarát like an accomplished person became a collection of merits gathered from different sources. It was in the time of this great Sultán that the people of Gujarát learned arts and wit, else before his time they were very simple, homely folk indeed. A soldier of the Sultán's army who held office near the person of the Sultán after some considerable sojourn at court, obtained leave to spend some time at home in his country. He lived there a certain time, and at the time of returning to the Sultán he looked about himself to choose a present suitable enough to take to the Sultán from his country. At last, thinking what a fine crop of vetches his estate had produced that season he determined upon them as the best rarity to present to the Sultán. He forthwith packed up some hampers of fresh-green-vetches. Round all these hampers he wrapped a pretty red cloth, and made a present of them to him. The Sultán asked him what it was. He said, it was some particularly fine vetches which he had brought for the Sultán's favourite horse. The Sultán smiled his thanks, encouraged whereby the unsophisticated countryman proceeded to give an account of a koli woman in his village, who, he said, used to bear a son every year. This year, said he, her husband was dead, and if the Sultán was so inclined, she was worth translation to the royal harem to multiply heirs for the throne. The Sultán laughed, and the more he did so, the more the yokel began to assert the truth of his story swearing that the woman had given birth to seven sons in seven years.

¹ Hálól, at present, for administrative purposes a subdivision of the Panch Maháls, is four miles from the hill of Pává Gadh. The ruins of old Chámpáner are described by Major Miles as extending as far as Hálól. See Asiatic Researches (Bombay) II., 151.

The existence of the Sultán was, one would say, for the happiness of his people. There was not a man who had the load of an injustice or injury on his heart, and everyone was blessed with happiness and liberty; no one ever dreamed of infringing the Muhammadan law, seeing that the Sultán himself was so obedient to it. It was a matter of "like king like subjects," as the adage goes.

It is related that once a goldsmith while on his way to present a beautifully set and ornamented *rubáb*¹ to the Sultán, was met by Kázi Najm-ud-din, who was at that time the ruler of religious ordinances in the city of Ahmedábád. The Kázi asked him what it was he was carrying, and to whom it belonged. He said it was a "rubab," and that it belonged to the Sultán. The Kázi ordered his men, who ran and snatching the instrument from the goldsmith's hand returned with it to him. The Kázi dashed it to the ground scattering its gold and precious stones into pieces. The goldsmith ran wailing and weeping to the Sultán and said how he had for months been preparing and setting jewels on the rubáb ordered by the king, how the Kázi Najm-ud-din had snatched it from his hands while he was bringing it to the Sultán, and destroyed it. The Sultán uttered not a word, but, after getting up from the Darbár when in his private apartments, he exclaimed (in the words of the Urdu proverb),² "Nichi Bèri- sab ne jhèri!" All gladly turn to shake a lowly tree, meaning all hands turn readily to harm the small in consequence of the lowly. "Why," added he, "does the Kázi not go to Rasúlábád, and fulminate his legal decrees against Miyán Manjhlá? (the familiar name by which the saint Sháh Álam was known). He, contrary to the law, dresses in silk and hears music!" The Kázi on hearing of this, with the intention of reforming the Saint also, having looked up and noted down his authorities on a piece of paper, put the paper by way of a note or memorandum into the folds of his turban with the intention of giving it to Sháhi Álam when he met him next. He hoped to elicit from the Saint a favourable reply which would at once reform the learned though mistaken Saint. The next Friday then the Kázi went to Rasúlábád. Sháh Álam used to keep himself aloof and in strict privacy for six days, worshipping God, and contemplating the Divine Existence. On every seventh day or Friday, in obedience to the command (of the Prophet): "Be kind unto Alláh's creatures," he used to come out, and mix with the people, and inculcate on them the ways of God, and satisfy the demands of the needy, and direct the foot-steps of the straying, till the time of the Ásr or second afternoon-prayers, when again he used to return to his privacy and not come out even if the king of the period called on him. In short, when the Kázi went to Rasúlábád, he was granted an interview by the Saint, immediately on seeing whom the fierce flame of the Kázi's bigotry became extinguished. He made his obeisance very respectfully, and sat down before the Saint. A carpenter was working before the Saint, who happened that day to be in a black, rough woollen cap and cloak. No sooner had the Kázi taken his seat, the Saint asked him what paper he had in the folds of his turban. The Kázi said, "They are some traditions." The Saint asked on what subject. The Kázi, too embarrassed to repeat them, handed the paper to the Saint, who, when he unfolded it, found, and observed to the Kázi, it was blank. The Kázi was lost in astonishment and confusion, and however much he searched his turban, he found no other piece. At that time a stick lying in the chamber attracted the alchemistic glance of the Saint, and turned into an ingot of pure gold. The Saint asked the Kázi to appropriate it, as he had a large family. The Kázi said, "I do not want gold, but union with the Lord, which I can obtain from no other but you. It was now the time for the Saint to retort: "But I love music and musical instruments and silken attire," objected the Saint, "and he who accepts those could only be my friend." The Kázi, said, he accepted all, and was ashamed of his past conduct. Sháh Alam now got up. At that time as has been observed he had on a dress of rough wool. He took up a piece of common rope that was lying before the carpenter who was working in the room and tied it round his waist, and stuck a small stick dagger-wise under it, and went out with the Kázi towards the mosque. As soon as he came out of the room, the rope assumed the form of a golden girdle, the piece of stick, of a poniard with jewelled hilt, and the rough woollens appeared of the texture and stuff of fine cloth of gold. He asked the Kázi to bear witness that the dress of Manjhan (a humble diminutive of his name Miyán Manjhlá), was the same that he had seen, but if it was the will of Alláh that he should appear in gold cloth and brocade in the eyes of the people of the world, who was poor Manjhan to stand between it? Saying so he turned to pray. After the prayers the Kázi entered the number of the Saint's followers, became by degrees one of the elect, and received the honour of becoming the Saint's deputy.¹

¹ The rubáb is the Arab guitar, a wire or stringed instrument. It is like the Indian sitar, save that it's face is covered by parchment.

² Literally a lowly or low-growing Ber (Jujube) is shaken by all.

In A. H. 891 (A. C. 1486) the Sultán entrusted the great city of Ahmedábád to Muháfiz Khán, and started in the direction of Mustafábád, and after a certain time spent in settling difficulties there, he returned to Muhammadábád. Again in A. H. 892 (A. C. 1486-87) he went in the direction of Mustafábád, and when he arrived at the town of Dhandhuká which is on the frontier between Gujarát and Sorath, he there entrusted the country of Sorath with the fortress of Junágadh to prince Khalíl Khán, and returned to Ahmedábád. In this year a party of merchants petitioned that while they were bringing four hundred Iráki and Turki horses from the countries of Khurásán and Irák together with certain Indian stuffs with the intention of selling them in the Sultán's territories, when they reached the fort of Mount Abu, the Rájá of Sirohi seized their property, not even sparing the old clothes they were wearing. "To whom," said they should we complain but to the King, the Champion of the Faith to give us redress." The Sultán caused them to give him a statement of the price of the horses and other property, and having seen it, he ordered that the sum should be paid to the merchants from the imperial treasury saying, "I can recover it from the Rájá of Sirohi." They brought the gold and counting it in the Sultán's presence gave it to the merchants.¹ The Sultán sounding the drums for a march took an army in the direction of Sirohi and sent a threatening order to the Sirohi Rájá to this effect. "Immediately, on the receipt of this order, hand over the horses and property taken from the merchants to the servants of the Presence, if not, consider the Royal army as arrived." The Sirohi Rájá when he understood the purport of the exalted order, sent the horses and property together with a fitting present to the Sultán, and with much humility begged for pardon. The Sultán returned to Muhammadábád, and for four years led a life of pleasure and ease at Muhammadábád, going during the hot season, when the melons were ripe, to Ahmedábád, and after a sojourn of three months in that city, returning to Muhammadábád.

¹ Another anecdote of the miraculous powers of Saint Sháhi Alam is given in the text on the authority of Sayad Mehmúd Bukhári, the author of the history called "Sham-i Jalál, to the effect that in a celebration of the Saint's anniversary of death that took place during the administration of Khán-i-Aázam Mirza Áziz Kokah (A. C. 1588-1592 and 1600-1606) a certain mukhtasib or censor of morals who had whipped a singer for singing songs near the Saint's grave, himself began to dance and sing on entering the shrine.

In A. H. 896 (A. C. 1490) the Sultán heard that Sultán Muhammad Lashkari, king of the Dakhan had killed Khwájah Mehmúd,² called Khwájah Jahán, who was a matchless vazír, and that Bahádur Giláni who had been brought up by the Khwájah had rebelled at the port of Dábhól.³ Sultán Muhammad Lashkari dying at this juncture, his son Sultán Mehmúd Bahmani, a boy of tender years, was placed on the throne. It was also reported that many of the nobles of the Dakhan had, with the intention of obtaining independence, broken out into rebellion, and that disorder had come over the affairs of the Kingdom of the Dakhan; that during this interval Bahádur Giláni, an adherent of the Khwájah's, had taken the opportunity of obtaining possession of several districts of the Dakhan, and having collected many ships was committing piracies on the Gujarát coast and that fear of his depredations had paralyzed the trade of the ports of Gujarát. The reason of his vexing the Gujarát ports was that Malik-ut-Tujjár Dakhani after the murder of Khwájah Jahán fleeing from the Dakhan came to the port of Khambáyut. Bahádur sent a person from Dábhól to ask for the hand of his daughter in marriage. At this juncture Malik-ut-Tujjár died, and his wakíl, one Muhammad Hayát, rejected with contempt Bahádur's offer of marriage, and addressed to Bahádur the message: "What power has a slave purchased for six pice to offer to marry the daughter of Malik-ut-Tujjār ?" When Bahádur's agent returned and explained his message, Bahádur sent certain assassins who killed Muhammad Hayát. After all by the assistance and influence of the people of Khambáyat, the girl was not sent to Bahádur, and that ill-starred man commenced to plunder the ports of Gujarát. They say that for several years ships neither came nor went from or to the ports of Gujarát, and that the sea-borne trade of Gujarát was so crippled that the people were reduced to eat coriander seed with their pán in place of their betel-nut or supári.

¹ This is interesting as the first case mentioned of the form of compensation which under the name of Valtar was until very lately in vogue in Gujarát.

² Otherwise called Khájah Mehmúd Gáwán.

³ On the north bank of the river Vashishti (called Halewacko and Kalewacko by the early navigators), in the Ratnagiri District. About this time, according to Athanasius Nikitin, Dábhól was the great mart for all nations living along the coast of India and Ethiopia.

On hearing this the Sultán became exceedingly enraged, and sent Malik Súrang Kiwám-ul-Mulk by land against Dábhól with a powerful army and elephants like mountains, and sent three hundred boats with well-armed men furnished with both cannons and muskets against Dábhól by sea. When the land army reached Agási and Bassein, which are situated on the frontier of Gujarát and the Dakhan, the ministers of Sultán Mehmúd Bahmani thinking that Sultán Mehmúd of Gujarát being a patron of theirs who had several times helped them and secured them from the hands of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji, of Mándu, that they should in return for his kindness anticipate him, and having cut off Bahádur's head sent it to him before the arrival of his army against Bahádur. Lest, also should this foreign army enter their territory, and the disturbance should increase and attain unforeseen proportions, the best course was thus to turn it back. They sent, therefore, a letter to Sultán Mehmúd Begada to the effect that the army of the Dakhan also belonged to his friends, if he gave the order the Sultán's army might remain where it was and it should be their duty to punish Bahádur, and if they failed in this, the Sultán could then act as he chose. After this the whole army of the Dakhan assembled and marched against Bahádur who issuing, fought with them, and his army was defeated, and Bahádur himself fell alive into their hands. His head was struck off, and brought to Sultán Mehmúd Bahmani, and he wrote of it to Sultán Mehmúd Begda and the Sultán re-called his army.

After this in A. H. 899 (A. C. 1493) the Sultán led an army in the direction of Morásá, on account of the rebellion of 'Alif Khán, one of the exalted slave born nobles of the Sultán, who held Morúsa as jagir. When he heard of the pomp of the Sultán's arrival he fled, and entered the city of Meimún, also called Káreth, which is situated in the neighbourhood of the mountains of Lúnáwára, and remained there a short time, and then went to Sultán Ghiásuddín Khilji. Ghiásuddín Khilji gave him no shelter because his father Aláuddín-bin Sohráb had behaved treacherously (to his ancestor Mehmúd Khilji of Málwa) of which mention has been made above. He, therefore, went thence to Sultánpúr, when, finally, the Sultán forgave his fault, and in A. H. 901 (A. C. 1496) he again entered the Sultán's service.

¹ The word used in the text is 'Maula-zádákh.' The word Maula in Arabic means both a master and slave; and 'Zádákh' means born. This Alif Khan was a son of Alá-ud-dín bin Sohráb, who distinguished himself in the reign of Sultán Kutb-ud-dín for his faithfulness to his master at the cost of his breach of faith with Mehmúd Khilji.

After this in A. H. 904 (A. C. 1499) the Sultán took an army against Asír, because Ádil Khán Fárúkhi, ruler of Asír and Burhánpúr, had delayed sending the fixed tribute. When he reached the bank of the river Tápti, Ádil Khán sent the tribute with many apologies. The Sultán returning sent his army by road of Nazarbár, and himself with his force went to see the forts of Tháíner and Dharmál, which Imád-ul-Mulk, Asas had conquered, and having seen them returned to Nazarbár and joining his army, returned to Muhammadábád.

In A. H. 906 (A. C. 1501) he heard that Sultán Násiruddín, son of Sultan Ghiásuddín, having slain his father had ascended the throne of the Sultánate. The Sultán desired to take his army in the direction of Mándu. In the end, however, on Sultán Násiruddín making submission he refrained from the purpose and for seven years did not make an expedition.

In A. H. 913 (A. C. 1507-8) he took an army against Chauls (Cheval) and thence marched against Bassein and Maháim on account of the disturbances created by the Firangis.¹ When he arrived at Dún (Dáhánu?) he received news that Malik Ayáz, a slave of the Sultán and Governor of Diu, with ten Turkish ships, manned by Turkish troops, had gone to the port of Chaul, and having fought with the seditious Firangis, and having killed many of them, had with his guns sunk one of their big ships, which contained very valuable property. In this battle four hundred of the Malik's men with some Turks had become martyrs. The Malik being victorious, returned to Diu and the Sultán was greatly pleased and caused Malik Ayáz to be rewarded and sent him a dress of honour, and himself returned to Bassein, and having stayed there for six days, on the 9th of the month of Moharram A. H. 914 (A. C. 1508) returned to his capital.

¹ The Franks or Europeans, and in a narrower sense the Portuguese.

After this Álam Khán bin Ahsan Khán, grandson of¹ the Sultán whose father had been the ruler of Asír and Burhánpur, requested his mother to petition the Sultán that seven years had elapsed since the death of Ádil Khán bin Mubárah, who had died without male issue, and that the amírs had raised to the throne one of the family of Malik Rájáh, having named him Ádil Khán, and had become masters of the country and were making free with its revenues. If the Sultán would raise the petitioner from the dust and exalt him to the throne of his ancestors, this act of kindness would be of-a-piece with the gracious protection of the lowly which had always been the distinguished trait of his royal line. When the mother of Álam Khán, the son of Ahsan Khán, made this petition to His Majesty, the Sultán consented, and in the month of Rajab (the seventh Musalmán month) of the abovementioned year, he handed over Asír to Álam Khán, and himself set out for Nazarbár. He spent the month of Ramazán (the ninth or fasting month) at the village of Sábli on the bank of the river Máhi, and sending for Prince Khalil Khán from Baroda took him with him.² When the Sultán arrived at Nazarbár, Malik Hisámuddin Mughal, in whose possession was half the country of Burhánpur, and who had written secret letters to Álam Khán offering to invite the Sultán to his aid if he joined him, on learning that Sultán Mehmúd himself was marching in that direction, departed from the agreement he had made, and having made an alliance with Nizámul-mulk Bahri, the ruler of Ahmednagar, brought him to his assistance and seated Álam Khán Khánzádah on the throne of Burhánpur.³ Malik Ládan Khilji who possessed the other half of the country of Burhánpur on account of the enmity he had with Hisámuddin, went to the skirts of the hill of Asír. At length when the Sultán arrived at the fort of Thálner Nizámul-mulk placing 4,000 horse of his army at the disposal of Hisámuddin himself returned to his capital. Having halted some days at Thálner owing to a slight indisposition the Sultán ordered Sayad Ásaf Khán who was unequalled for intelligence in his day with Azízul mulk, the fiefholder of Sultánpur and Nazarbár, to march against Hisámuddin and drive him out of the country, and to gain over Ládán Khiljí and appoint him in Hisámuddin's place. When Sayad Ásaf Khán arrived at Ránobar, which is a dependency of Burhánpúr, the army of Nizám-ul-Mulk-Bahri with Álam Khán Khánzádah, fled towards the Dakhan, and Hisámuddin avoiding an engagement came to Thálner by another route and paid his respects to the Sultán. Malik Ládán Khilji also came and made his obeisance. After the 'Id-ud-duhá (the sacrifice festival following the pilgrimage in the twelfth month of the Musalmán calendar) Álamkhún, the son of Ahsan Khán, was ennobled by the title of Ádil Khán and four elephants and three lákhs of tankas were given to him, and he was placed in the government of Ásir and Burhánpúr. The Sultán also promoted Malik Ládán Khilji to the title of Khán Jahán and gave him the village of Banás or Biyás under Sultánpur and Nazarbár which was the birthplace of the said Malik, and nominated him to assist Álam Khán. He also made peace between Hisámuddin and Khán Jahán and brought them together, and he dignified Malik Muhammad Mákhá, or Bákhá, son of Imádul-mulk Asírí with the title of Gházi Khán, and Malik Álam Sháh, the thánedar of Thálner, was granted the title of Fateh Khán and his brother Malik Yúsuf the title of Saif Khán, and the eldest son of Malik Ládán the title of Mujáhid Khán. All these amírs with Nasrat Khán and Mujáhidul-mulk Gujaráti were attached to the service of Ádil Khán, who, pleased and joyful with much pomp, started for Asir. The Sultán returned to his own country, and Malik Hisámuddin for two marches accompanied the Sultán. When he took leave, the village of Dhanúra or Dhantra under Sultánpur and Nazarbár was bestowed on him. When the Sultán arrived at Muhammadabad, he granted leave to Prince Khalíl Khán and directed him to return to his own appointment at Baroda. He sent Sikandar Khán and Latíf Khán, the sons of Khalíl Khán, with him and retained their younger brother Bahádur Khán with himself and showed towards him the love of a father and the affection of a grandfather. He often used to say: "This son of mine will be a great king." It is related that one day he took Bahádur Khán and seated him on his knee and said to him with great affection, "Oh! Bahádur Khán! I have prayed God to bestow on thee the Kingdom of Gujarát and God has accepted my prayer!"

¹ A son of his daughter or niece.

² The translation by Sir Olive Bayley places the village of Sábli on the Narbadá. This portion of the text, however, is confusing and vague. The Tabakát-i-Akbari (Persian text) seems to be more accurate. It says the Sultán issued orders to collect the army in Rajab (the seventh Musalmán month), and set out for Burhánpur in Shaábán (the following month), and spent the Fasting month (Ramazán, the ninth month), in camp at Sábli.

³ Álam Khan (which was also the name of the pretender) was the protege of Ahmednagar. The title of Khán-Zádah is enjoyed by younger sons of royal families.

In the month of Zilhaj, the twelfth Musalmán month, A. H. 916 (A. C. 1510) the Sultán went to Pattan. This was the last expedition of the Sultán. He assembled the great and learned men of Pattan like Mauláná Moínuddin Kázzrúni and Tájuddin Suyúti, and said to them, "this time I have come to take leave of you all, I think that the measure of my life is full!" All invoked blessings on him. The Sultán visited all the tombs of the saints at Pattan and on the fourth day he left Pattan on his return to Ahmedábád. When he arrived at Sarkhej he visited the tomb of 'Sheikh Ahmed Khattú, and looking earnestly at his own tomb which he had built in his life time at the foot of the Sheikh's, said : " This is the future home of Mehmúd ! In a short time he will descend hither !"

After this he came to Ahmedábád and fell sick and remained ill for three months, and he sent for Prince Khalíl Khán from Baroda, and told him that he was about to die, and gave him fatherly advice. It so chanced, however, that he recovered, and gave leave to Khalíl Khán, but on account of a number of ailments combined with an impaired stomach and the weakness of old age the illness returned after three months. He ordered that Khalíl Khán should again be sent for, but before his arrival, at the time of the second afternoon prayers on Monday, in the blessed month of Ramazán in A. H. 917 (A. C. 1511), he departed from this transient life for the Eternal Abode. They carried his sacred coffin to Sarkhej and in the above mentioned place committed it to the dust—may the mercy of God be on him !

The period of his reign was fifty-four years and one month, and his honoured age sixty-seven years and three months. The Sultán was a disciple of Sheikh Rahmat-ulláh-bin Sheikh Ázízullah, the Resigner in Alláh, who sleeps his eternal sleep in Sheikhpurá, a suburb of Ahmedábád, which was populated by him. The Sheikh was of a high stage of mystic attainments and was an excellent man.

Darya Khán was the first of the three friends and companions of the Sultán's youth. It was Daryá Khán who built the great dome to the north of the city, and this dome is so lofty that there is not another built of brick of such dimensions in all Gujarát. Another associate of the Sultán's was Alaf Khán Bhokai, who built a lofty mosque near Dholka to the west of the fort, and travellers both by sea and land agree in stating that no brick-built mosque in this country equals it in size.

¹ The name of the Saint is in the text prefaced by the words in Arabic : "The Full Moon of the Truthful, and the Argument of the Knowers of God."

Malik Muhammed Ikhtiár was the third of his companions. When the Sultán ascended the throne, he conferred on each of his companions the rank of a panj-hazári, or leader of five thousand horse, and the title of Khán. Malik Muhammad, however, did not accept the title, saying that his name was Muhammad, a name so sacred that no title or appendage could add to its worth; all the others, however, accepted their gifts. One day the Malik was passing in a palanquin through a suburb of Ahmedabád of the name of Mithápúr. There was a very shady tamarind tree on the road, the cool shade of which tempted the nobleman to shelter himself under it from the scorching rays of a noon-day sun. He stopped there and gave himself up to sleep, and in the cool of the shade slept long. When he awoke he saw that in a mosque in the corner of the shady nook a mullah was teaching children. His name was Mulláh Kabír, and he was one of the followers of the great saint Sheikh Hamíduddin Nágori, one of the most famous of saints. The Mulláh was passing his time in worship, retirement and obscurity. The nobleman on awakening from his siesta, made his ablutions, and said his prayers in the following of the Mulláh. After the prayers, the Mulláh cast a searching glance and for a time gazed steadfastly at the nobleman in such a way that he was attracted towards the Mulláh, and felt such a rapture in the attraction, as to lose sense of everything else. When after a time he regained consciousness, he got up, and went home. Though his house had everything in it of comfort and luxury he was restless. The next morning he again went to that tamarind tree. When he reached the Mulláh, he sat respectfully in his presence for some hours, and again went home. For some days he continued to do so. One day the Mulláh told him in privacy that he was of the world worldly, and asked why he came there so often to the detriment of his own affairs. If he was for the worship of God, he should give up all else and should devote himself wholly to God's service; if not, he should not take the trouble as that was a very difficult life in which success was by no means easy. The Malik said he wanted a day to consider and deliberate with his own mind, and see which way his mind was inclined to follow, and which to abstain from. The Mulláh said, "So be it." The Malik went home, and summoning before him all his servants he paid them all their dues, giving each a sum of money over and above his claim to obviate the possibility of want, should any of them be long in getting work. He then collected his female slaves round him and offered those their emancipation who wished for it, and offered those marriage who wished for a husband. He gratified the desires of them all. In fine, the Malik having got ready an inventory of all his valuable 8 horses, elephants, cash, and ornaments with his estates, &c., went to the king, and placing before him the inventory, told him to give away the property to whomsoever he wished, as it was his (the Sultán's), and was no longer required by him (the Malik). The Sultán thought he was speaking in displeasure and with great concern inquired the reason, and showed great kindness and sympathy, assuring him of visiting his vengeance upon anybody that may have wronged him. But the Malik said he had the whole of his life been serving the Sultán, but that he now wanted to serve Him who had placed the cap of servitude on the head of the Sultán himself. He said these words and got up and returned home. The Sultán called Darya Khán and Alif Khán, who were sincere friends of the Malik, and recounted to them the words of the Malik, and showed them the inventory. They said, through their great friendship for the Malik, that he was gone mad to say such words. They asked for the inventory and requested leave to go to the man and to restore him to his senses. The Sultán gave up the papers to them. When they reached the Malik's house he guessed their errand and sent them word to wait awhile as he would shortly meet them. In the meanwhile he sent for a barber, and taking up his sword¹ ordered him to at once shave his head. He then ordered him to shave off his beard and mustaches and eye-brows, in the belief that these hair had grown up by food and amidst passions and desires unhallowed and ungodly. He then sent for his wife and told her that whatever was then in the house was hers and it was enough to last her a life-time. He gave her leave to go to her father's house, adding that if she had a desire for another husband that he gave up in the name of God all his marital rights upon her, and that she was welcome to marry any one she list. That faithful lady, however, said, if the way to God imperatively required all this that she was silent, if not, she would follow him like his shadow.

¹ The Malik had to enforce his order with a threat of the sword, as his order to shave his head included the shaving of the "four-eyebrows" (chahár abrá), the Musalman devotees tonsure, and he was sure the barber would out of love and regard for his form & state hesitate to carry out orders of which his master might afterwards have cause to repent. The barber also like the Sultán possibly took the same view, i. e., the Malik was giving up the world in anger.

She said it was not meet that she should be the sharer of his love and his happiness in the days of prosperity and not be allowed to share his adversity also. He said if she cared for his companionship he was agreeable to bear her company. The good wife having got her wish, collected all her ornaments and jewels, threw them away before her slave girls, and adopting the dress of one of them, and taking the hand of her husband accompanied him in broad light of day, and came with him before Darya Khán and Alif Khán who were waiting and passed by them. The friends astounded at what they saw, got up and going to the Sultán represented to him all that had occurred, saying that their friend was, alas! spiritpossessed. The Malik betook himself to the Sheikh. The Sheikh got up, and taking the hand of the Malik's wife said to her, "Sister, go thou within to thy sisters," and so saying led her into his zenána; when inside, he asked his women, if they knew that the lady was no less than the wife of the Ibráhím Ad-ham¹ of the day, "Consider her society a boon and lose not an opportunity of serving her." Saying this to his women, the Sheikh came out, and initiated her husband into his order. It is related that the Malik rendered himself so humble in his penitence that he used barefooted to carry on his head the water for the Sheikh from the river Sábarmati by way of the Three Gates Market to the Sheikh's place, a distance of over a mile. People at first used to taunt him with madness, but he earnestly adhered to his humble mode of life. One day the Sultán saw him in this plight, and remarked to Daryá Khán, "Do you see Malik Muhammad? If he puts himself to this trouble for the sake of his faith, he must be in a wonderful state of mind." Daryá Khán said, "It seems to me from the present conduct of this man that he will ere long become the object of general veneration." People flocked to him with a thousand objects in numbers, and what was more, gained their aspirations, and obtained their wishes. The Sheikh used to say, he wanted the Malik to obtain higher spiritual distinction, but that he had stopped short in the middle of his course. The Malik on hearing this became ashamed and regretful and from that moment he began to follow a course which ultimately made him as shunned of the people as he was yet awhile sought after. He began by making himself so free with people's property taking from one and giving away to another, that though he never kept anything to himself, people began to shun him. In the end the Malik got the title of Muhammad Ikhtiár from the court of the Forgiving King of Kings and died in the highest odour of sanctity, even Sháh Álam admitting it.

¹ Ibráhím Ad-ham was a famous Saint who, from being one of the richest men of Balkh, became a Sarvish for love of God. He ranks amongst the highest of Islám's Saints. According to Abul Mahásin Nujúm, his death took place in H. 160 (A.D. 776-77), but Abul Fida places the event a year later.

Another of the Sultán's religious nobles was Abdul Latíf Malik Mehmúd Dáwarul-Mulk. He was of Koreish¹ origin. Though rich in matters worldly he was devoted to religion, and thus it was that he was styled Dáwarul-Mulk. Lest the concourse of men, horses, soldiers, and elephants at his door, should hurt any of his neighbours, he sold his mansions in the city, and constructed houses outside the city for himself. They say that he charged the cultivators of his estates only the small rates sanctioned by the Muhammadan Law, and not an iota above. People used to flock to his jágirs which became so prosperous that one of them excited the covetous desire of the Sultán's son-in-law. He asked of his father-in-law to be allowed to take the Malik's jágirs, saying that any other jágir that would be given to the Malik, would, in his hands, become as prosperous. The Sultán declining this proposal, this misguided young man attempted the Malik's life. But the Malik could not be harmed. The bravoës were captured, and when asked by the Malik who had set them to the deed they had attempted, they replied they had not the wherewithal to marry their grown-up daughters, and that the Sultan's son-in-law had promised them help had they succeeded in taking his life. The Malik said, "Ay, want is a bitter thing, and drives men to such bad actions"; and ordered them to be given the necessary sums, and to be set free.

The Malik was a believer in the saintliness of Sháhi Álam, and by his guidance had attained to the position of a saint. They say that a prince of the Dakhan being afflicted with white leprosy² was brought before Sháh Álam, while the Malik was pouring water on his hands (duties the honour of which appertained permanently to the Malik) while making ablutions and repeating the prayers for that ceremony. So engaged, Sháh Álam did not make any reply to the entreaties of the people of the diseased prince. After ablutions he ordered the water remaining in the ewer to be administered to the prince, who, no sooner he drank it, than he was, by the grace of God, cured of the unseemly ailment. As Khwájáh Moínud-din of Ajmere had Sálár Masúúd his almoner, so Malik Mehmúd was Sháh Álam's. Crowds of people from the Dakhan used to come and return with heart's content having gained their desires.

¹ The tribe from which the prophet was descended. As according to a tradition of the Prophet stating that every convert to Islám was of himself, many converted Hindus took the surname of Kureishi, the surname has lost much of its original sense of nobility in India, where every new convert calls himself a Koreishi.

² Leucoderma.

The Malik was appointed by the Sultán thánédár of Amrún ten kos from Morvi in the district of Jháláwár. He used to often to engage in warfare with the unbelievers. In one of his expeditions against Bhuj, the capital of the Rájá of Katch, having crossed a part of the Ran, which is an arm of the salt sea, and having on the third day returned to the habitable part of the country, he went to sleep under the cool shade of a tree, and saw on waking that some of his men were grazing their horses in a cultivated field of Jawár (Sorghum vulgare). He remonstrated with them as to the justice of such a proceeding, but having suffered from three days' want of food and fodder, they replied that they themselves could well appreciate equity in the midst of want, but that it was a virtue their horses did not understand. The Malik said he was sure if their forbearance and patience proceeded from the fear Divine, their horses also would surely share their patience; saying so, he let loose his own horse near a very green and inviting field. The horse did not move an inch and stood as if he were standing in obedience to the bit. Finally the Hindus of Amrún rendered obedience to him. One of the land-holders of those parts, however, who used to regularly wait on the Malik, was a man of mischief and evil nature. He told the Malik that a certain Garásiá (a land-holding Rajput) of his fraternity had a sword of unrivalled temper. "When he comes to you," said he, "do draw it from the scabbard and see of what famous metal is the blade." On the other hand, he warned the Garásiá that the Malik was so displeased with him that he had determined to kill him at the first opportunity, and that he had arranged that his men should fall on him (the Garásiá) at a pre-arranged signal, which was to be the drawing by the Malik the Garásiá's sword from the scabbard. The Garásiá told his servants that the Malik had preconcerted his death. "When the Malik draws the sword," said the land-holder to his men, "do you be the first to fall on him and kill him." The Malik, unaware of the treachery, took the sword from the hand of the Garásiá when he came to the audience. He had not well grasped the handle when the Hindus fell on him, and killed him. From that day to this the fame of the Malik as a martyr attracts numbers of believers from far and near to his shrine, and his miracles, after martyrdom, have been numerous. The blind are given eye-sight, the lame return whole, the barren are gladdened by the birth of children and few return disappointed from his shrine. Others having some desires to be obtained, put fetters on their legs with locks of iron joining the fetters. It has often happened that, when one of these has gained his desire, the lock has opened of itself, and the fetters have dropped. Some people wishing for gold are given it by the saint by being directed to apply to a particular person at a given address for a certain sum. The man referred to as the giver is also directed in a dream to pay the sum on appearance to the person described. From the date of his martyrdom H. 915 (A. D. 1509) up to now, H. 1020 (A. D. 1611) one hundred and five years have passed, still men continue to believe in him.

¹ In North Kathiawar near the Ran. Tabakáti Akbari.—(Elliot, Vol., V. p. 444, note 1.)

They say that another of the great nobles of the Sultán was Malik Ayáz. Although he was a slave bought with gold, yet he was fit to govern a kingdom, and lived in and maintained a marvellously high state. They say that besides menial servants there were a thousand water-carriers on his establishment. He had a large tank made of leather, and when his army was on the march they took water from that, and gave the horses and elephants to drink. Several memorable works still remain in Gujarát which were executed by him. For instance, he built the fort of Díu which the Firangis have now¹ destroyed; and have built another fort in its place. He constructed a bastion in the sea, called Sankal Koth (or the Chain Bastion) and connected it with the shore by means of an iron chain that the ships of the Firangis should not be able to pass over it, and that tower is still standing. After the martyrdom of Sultán Bahádúr, Mehmúd's grandson, this fortress, city and port fell into the hands of the Portuguese. Malik Ayáz constructed gardens in the island of Díu, and of the two arms of the sea which coming from either side of the island of Díu, curve to the north, he built a stone bridge, which at present the Portuguese have broken down. During the government of the Malik, the Firangi was unable to enter the Gujarát ports. Now, however, by degrees, things have come to such a pass that without a permit from the Firangi, a vessel dare not leave any of the ports of Gujarát, except Surat, and this also is owing solely to the gallantry and bravery of those entrusted with the government of the city of Surat.

¹ 1611 (A. H. 1020) the time in which the Historian flourished.

It is related that at the time of taking his meals, the Malik's orders were that his servants should blow a trumpet which was the signal for everybody who was hungry to present himself at the table-cloth. From head to foot the table was served in an impartially equal style. Immediately on taking his seat the Malik used to glance over from right to left, and woe to the steward who should have made any the least difference in serving the guests. His table-cloth used to be stocked with the delicacies of Persia, Turkey and India. After dinner the plates of each guest used to be scrupulously handed over to his servants with the same impartiality. After that they used to bring átr and pán. His table was always so served. His army also was the best clad in the kingdom. The lowest of his servants were well-dressed, and his soldiers most completely armed and equipped. The soldiers of his army, up to the veriest scavenger, used to be clad in velvet and brocade, and silk embroidery and scarlet, and to bear swords and quivers and poniards with gold and silver bars and rivets. They say that in the days of Sultán Muzaffar, son of Mehmúd, Ráná Súngá having collected an army of nearly 100,000 horse, suddenly swept down on the Gujarát frontier near Ahmednagar which is situated about 10 kos from Ídar. The army of Sultán Muzaffar was dispersed about the country, and it took time to collect. Nizám Khán Bahmani and the patrollers of the roads of that Súbáh having issued from Ahmednagar with 4,000 horse joined battle and defeated the greater part of the Ráná's forces. In the end, however, 3,000 men of his party became martyrs, and he himself with many others, came wounded from the battle, though nearly 7,00⁰ of the Rajpúts were slain. When this news reached the Sultán, he sent for Malik Ayáz from Sorath. The Malik came with his army by forced marches. The Sultán placing some amírs and a large army under Malik Ayáz appointed him to carry on operations against the Ráná. The Ráná turned back. The Malik pursued him. They say that in spite of the forced marches and the daily expectation of battle, the principal amírs used to come and dine at the table of the Malik, and whoever of them was unable to come, the Malik's servants sent food to him. Several of the amírs who considered themselves of equal rank with the Malik took umbrage at these arrangements, and they told their servants not to return the copper trays and china vessels, so that food might not again be sent to them, and their servants did so. When this had gone on three days, the Malik's steward of the kitchen went to the presence of the Malik, and represented the matter to him saying that the vessels in which food had been sent to the tents of the amirs were not returned. The Malik replied, "Never mind keep you on sending food in the same manner as you have hitherto done." They say that they went on sending food in this manner for one month, and did not ask for their vessels back. After one month the amirs struck with admiration at the generosity and vast stores of the Malik, returned his vessels, and acknowledged his greatness. In short, the Malik pursued the Ráná as far as Mandisúr. At night the Rajpúts made a night attack on the camp of the Malik, and after slaying many horses departed. The Malik ordered that they should bury the slain horses, and that they should replace each horse killed by a horse of the same colour from the Malik's private stables. Seven of the most broken down and infirm horses of the number killed were allowed to remain; when in the morning the spies of the Ráná having counted them, told him that in the night attack only seven of the Malik's horses were killed, the Ráná much chagrined, reproached his Rájputa for seeking to magnify the number of the horses they had killed while in truth they had slain only seven sorry beasts.

The Malik had three sons: Is-hák, who received the title of Changíz Khán, Malik Túghá, and Eliás. Is-hák was very fat, with a frame like an elephant, and he used to generally ride on a camel because no horse could be found up to his weight; nevertheless he was a very good marksman, and an excellent wrestler, and no athlete could escape from his grasp. Eventually, Sultán Bahádur the son of Sultán Muzaffar, the son of Sultán Mehmúd, at the instigation of Rúmi Khán, put to death the three sons of the Malik. If it please God, I will hereafter relate in detail, each in its proper place, the cause of the coming of the Ráná in the time of Sultán Muzaffar, and the cause of the deaths of these sons of the Malik in the reign of Sultán Bahádur. Is-hák had a hundred wives, married and concubines. His virile powers were extraordinary, and it is said that his wives loved him so much and that he kept them all so happy, that at his death many of them committed suicide. Malik Ayáz himself died in the time of Sultán Muzaffar, son of Sultán Mehmúd.

Another of the great amírs of the Sultán was Malik Shaábán who had the title of Malik Shark.¹ He had been bought with gold by Sultán Muhammad son of Sultán Ahmed, and he attained greatness during the time of Sultán Mehmúd, and reached the rank of a minister. He was a man of great wit and generosity. They say that at this time there was neither in the East nor West a vazír like him, and all the people of God were happy during his administration. He constructed a garden in the suburbs of Ahmedábád with a lofty mosque on the east of the city called the Bagh-i-Shaábán. Eventually, he turned his thoughts towards repentance and retirement, and sat in that garden in the service of God; and, although the Sultán pressed him to carry on the vazarat, he refused and said: "The rest and leisure that I experience during one day's retirement and quiet in this garden is such as I have never before enjoyed in my life." He never again left that garden and there ended his life, and he lies buried in the court of the mosque which is in that garden; may God's mercy be on him.

Another celebrated amír was Khudávand Khán Álim who populated Álimpur to the south of the city of Ahmedabád, and built there a large mosque. The mosque is built of stone and paved with marble which was brought from a distance of two hundred kos. He was son-in-law of Sultán Muhammad, son of Sultán Ahmed. He was a man of noble character, ready of tongue, and conversant with many languages; in archery and the game of Chaugan (polo) he was without an equal. They say that it was he who introduced from Bijánagar and the country of the Dakhan the seeds of the Kharbúzah (melon) and saplings of the fig and of the solid bamboo. He several times rebelled against the Sultán. The Sultán forgave him and said: "If I slay Malik Álim or exile him from the country, where in Gujarát can I find a man like him? And in his extreme age, he also became a repentant man and a recluse occupying himself in the worship of God, passed the remainder of his life there in religious exercises.

Another celebrated amír was Alif Khán Bhukái who was of very exalted dignity and of a generous soul, and he was a friend and companion of the Sultán. The great mosque and stone-cistern behind the town of Dholka were built by him, and these buildings are witnesses to his exalted dignity and state. Travellers from all parts of the world agree that so large a brick mosque has not been built elsewhere in the world, as has previously been mentioned.

¹ Correctly Malik-ush-Shark, or the Lord of the East.

Another amír was Daryá Khán, the builder of Daryápur which is a celebrated suburb, north of Ahmedábád.

Another was Imádul-mulk Ásas who populated Ásaspúr¹ which lies between Rasulábád and Batwá. No suburb of Ahmedábád is so beautiful as this. The walls of its fortification are of burnt brick plastered with lime, and around it are gardens of mangoes and khirnis (Minusop, indica) and Brab palms in great number. The flower of the Moghrá (Jasminum Zambac) which is the husband of perfumes, of all sweet smelling flowers reaches a perfection in Ásaspur such as it does in no other place. Hazarat Sháh Álam used to call this suburb "the Karim-ut-tarafain, or the gentle on both the sides, because to the south of it is Batwá where lies the tomb of Hazarat Kutbul-aktáb, and to the north of it is Rasulábád formerly the residence, now the tomb, of Hazrat Sháh. From Batwá to Ásaspur, and from Rasulábád to the above-mentioned suburb, are on both sides, gardens of mangoes and khirnis; whose grateful shade causes the traveller to call to mind the kindness of his mother and father. The tomb of the Malik is situated outside the suburb fortifications with a joy-giving mosque and built tank 10×10, or a hundred gaz square.

Another amír was Táj Khán Sálár, a generous man, of good disposition, so much so, that after his death no amír would accept his title, because no other was conscious of possessing his generosity and manliness. With the example of his liberality and generosity none of the nobles wished for his title, and rejected it. After some time, in the time of Sultán Muzaffar bin Mehmúd, Táj Khán Tariáni, the builder of the dome of Hazrat Sháh Álam Bukhári's tomb, accepted the title. He was Táj khán's equal in liberality, perhaps he even exceeded him, and he built Tájpúr which lies to the south within the city wall of Ahmedábád.

Another amír was Kiwámul-mulk Sárang who originally was the son of a Rájput, and his name was Sárang, and his brother's name was Múla. Both of them were captured by the Sultán, who caused them to adopt Islám. Malik Amín Kamál, the poet and companion of Sultán Bahádur, who was famous for his wit and repartee, was one of his descendants. An account of him in detail will be given in the reign of Sultán Bahádur—if God wills. In fine, both the brothers attained to great confidence in the time of the Sultán. They say that

¹ The village at present known as Isan-púr.

Malik Sárang was very bold in his expressions, and the Sultán used to permit it. The suburb of Sárangpur and a mosque outside the city to the east of Ahmedábád were founded by him.

Another noble Iláji Kálú was a slave of the Sultán's. He populated Kálúpur to the east of the city. They say he was a learned man.

Then there were two brothers from Khurásán, Aâzam and Moâzzam, both skilful archers. They built the mosque between Ahmedábád and Sarkhej with a reservoir in which water does not stay. Near the mosque is a dome in which both the brothers lie buried. Some of the people of Gujarát relate a story of these two brothers which is not fit for repetition.

ACCESSION OF SULTAN MUZAFFAR II.

Sultán Mehmúd had four sons: of these, the first was Muhammad Kálá, and the name of his mother was Ráni Rúpmanjhari who formerly belonged to the harem of Sultán Kutb-uddin. After his death she came to Sultán Mehmúd. The above-mentioned prince and his mother died during the life-time of the Sultán. The tomb of Ráni Rúpmanjhari is well-known in the Mánek Chowk of Ahmedábád.

The second son was Apá Khán, and the name of his mother was Ráni Saráni. The Ráni's tomb is situated near the Asoria Gate. By the order of the Sultán poison was put into his cup, because he entered some one's house, and the master of the house came in and captured, and bound him. This news reached the Sultán who ordered that they should give him to drink poisoned sherbet.

Another son was Ahmed Khán who was given the title of Ahmed Sháh by Khudá-wand Khán, the mention of which has been previously made.

Another son was Khalíl Khán, the heir to the throne, who was afterwards styled Sultán Muzaffar, may the mercy of God be on him! It is said that the birth of Sultán Muzaffar happened after dawn on Wednesday the 6th of the month of Shaâbân A. H. 880 (6th December A. C. 1475), and that the date is obtainable from the word فرع Farrukh meaning the auspicious or happy. On account of his beauty he was named Khalíl Khán, and the name of his mother was Ráni Hirábái, daughter of Nága Réná, a Rájput chief of the banks of the river Mahi. About four or five days after his birth the Ráni quitted this transient abode for the eternal one, and her death caused the Sultán great grief. It is said that when Sultán Muzaffar was born, Sultán Mehmúd wrapping the new born babe in the clothes he was wearing, took him to Hans-Bái, his (Sultan Mehmúd's) step-mother. This lady had expressed a desire of bringing up one of her son's offspring. This old queen used to take greater care of the boy than perhaps even his mother would have done. The boy showed great promise so that though the heir-apparent Ápá Khán was then alive, Sultán Mehmúd and others also used to connect the hope of the throne with him and say: "It will be from this boy and his children that my line shall last."

Let it be known that at the close of Sultán Mehmúd's reign, Sayad Muhammad Jaunpuri, who claimed to be the promised Mehdi coming from Jaunpúr to Ahmedábád, put up at the mosque of Taj Khán Sálár, which is near the Jamálpúr Gate, where he used frequently to address and preach to the people. Crowds of people used to come to hear him. When Badrul-Árifín Hazrat Sayad Sháh Sheikh Jí, son of Sayad Mehmúd, son of Kutbul-Álam Sayad Burhánuddín, came to visit the Sayad, after shaking hands they sat in the above-mentioned mosque. The Sayad opened the conversation by repeating a verse from the Kurán suited to the occasion, and Sheikh Jí also recited in answer another verse. The Sayad now read another verse, and Sháh Jí also read a verse in reply; they repeated this three times.¹ After this the Hazrat Sheikh Jí took his leave, and on the way one of his disciples asked him concerning the Sayad. He replied, that Sayad Muhammad was a man possessing some degree of saintly or mystic ecstasy, who spoke to every one of the hidden things of God, and who did not talk to people according to their understandings. From what he had seen of him he thought that after his death there would arise great dissensions amongst his followers. They say that the words of the Sayad were very touching and had great effect, and whoever heard them used to devote himself to God's service. The Sultán also wished to hear the Sayad, but his ministers forbade him, "lest the eloquence of the Sayad should so touch the Sultán's heart as to bring disorder into the affairs of the State."¹

¹ This means that they carried on a short conversation in Kuranic verses, a very difficult thing to do, except for those who know the great Book by heart. The Sayad was the founder of the Mahdavi (now called the Ghair Mahdiya) sect whose followers can still be found in Pálanpur, the Dakhan and Hydarábád. He died at Farrah in Afghanistan in the year A.C. 1505.

One day the Sayad said, "I can show the Lord to the world with these eyes of the flesh." On hearing this speech, the Ulamás (learned men) of Ahmedábád took opinions regarding slaying him. All the Mullás signed Fatwás (orders) for his death, except Mauláná Muhammad Táji, who was the wisest of the Ulamás of the age and the teacher of teachers. He said to the Ulamás, "Have you learnt wisdom only to give your opinions for the death of this Sayad?" After this occurrence the Sayad left Ahmedábád, and went to Pattan, and stayed at a village called Barli about three kos from Pattan, and there claimed to be the Mehdi. When the Ulamás of Pattan heard of his claim they hastened to slay him. The Sayad fled to Hindustán and thence went to Khurásán. When he arrived at a Kandahár village called Farrah, a party of men created a disturbance and slew him. But the Mehdiyás say that the Sayad died a natural death, and that no one killed him. God knows the truth. This happened in A. H. 910 (A.C. 1505).²

SULTAN MUZAFFAR II. MOUNTS THE THRONE.

Two days after the death of Sultán Mehmúd Sultán Muzaffar came from Baroda to Ahmedábád, and the ministers and nobles went to meet him, and were admitted to an audience. At the time of the Friday prayer, on the 7th of the blessed month of Ramazán, A. H. 917 (A. D. 1515) in the twenty-seventh year of his age Sultán Muzaffar sat on the throne of the kingdom. After the custom of his ancestors he bestowed on the soldiers and amírs many horses and dresses of honour fit for the rank of each. The list of the people who received titles that day is this :—Rashídul-mulk was distinguished by the title of Khudáwand Khán, and he was made vazír. Khush-kadam was made Mukhlis Khán, Malik Burhán was given the title of Mansúr Khán, Malik Kutub of Azud-ul-mulk, Malik Mubárák was given the title of Iftikháru-l-mulk, Nasírshádi of Mubárizul-mulk, Malik Sheikhji of Táidul-mulk, and Malik-Sháh, Ruknul-mulk. All these were sons of noblemen who, during the minority of Khalil Khán, were in his service, and the amírs also of Mehmúd Sháh were exalted in rank and emoluments. Learned and pious men also received fitting presents and honours, and both the great and the small united in asking God for blessings on the new Sultán.

¹ One anecdote is here omitted.

² About this date my MS. differs from that of Sir Olive Bayley, which gives the date H. 910 (A.D. 1505). My MS. gives the date H. 917 (A.D. 1516). Blochman (Áfa-i-Akbari, p. v.) also gives the former date, so I have adopted it.

Afterwards, in the month of Shawwál, the tenth month of the Musalmán year, news was received that Mírzá Ibráhim Khán, envoy of Ismáíl Sháh, King of the Irák and Khurásán, had arrived. The Sultán ordered Malik Shark, Hamidul-mulk, Kutbul-mulk, and Khurásán Khán, with a number of other amírs to meet him, and conduct him and his forty tall hat-wearers¹ with all honours to the foot of the throne. The above-mentioned Mírzá presented to the Sultán, on behalf of his sovereign, an extremely beautiful turquoise cup together with a small box filled with jewels and valuable clothes and thirty Irák horses. The Sultán received the Mírza with great cordiality and favour, and bestowed on him and his followers dresses of honour suited to their rank and kingly gifts, and ordered that they should be accommodated in a fitting mansion, and that their daily supplies should be sent to them. After some days the Sultán went in the direction of Baroda, and in that district he founded a city which he named Daulatábád.²

At this time news was received that Khwájah-Jahán, a eunuch of the household of Mehmúd Khilji the deceased king of Málwá and who was one of his principal nobles, having made a sudden attack had deposed Sultán Mehmúd, the son of Násiruddin, and had seated his younger brother Sultán Muhammad on the throne. Sultán Mehmúd with a large force came and laid siege to Mándu. For some time dissension and conflict had raged between the two brothers. The end of it was that Sultán Mehmúd was victorious and Sultán Muhammad fled and sought protection with Sultán Muzaffar and encamped near Muhammadábád. At this time his humble petition, setting forth the above circumstances, arrived. The Sultán sent an order to Muhammad-Muháfiz Khán, Dárogháh (officer in charge) of Muhammadábád, to lead Sultán Muhammad with due honours into the city, to provide him with such things as he needed, and after he had rested from the fatigue of his journey to send him to the presence. On receipt of the order Muháfiz omitted none of the duties of hospitality. When the Málwá Sultán came to the presence of Sultán Muzaffar, he regarded him with the eye of kindness and favour, and said, "If God wills, after the rainy season I will march against Mándu, and, having divided the kingdom of Málwá into two portions, I will bestow one on you, and one on Sultán Mehmúd." He directed Kaisar Khán to the thánédári of Dohad, which is situated on the Málwá frontier, to assemble the local chiefs and landholders, and to make himself acquainted with the roads and customs of Málwá. He ordered the principal paymasters and military officers to inform and prepare the troops for the expedition. The Sultán himself went to the village of Morámli which was the Shikárgúh (game preserve) of the late Sultán Mehmúd, for the sake of hunting and for some time remained in that village so occupied. At that camp Aázam-Humáyún Ádil Khán of the exalted throne, ruler of Asir and Burhánpur, who was the Sultán's son-in-law, came with his sons and waited upon the Sultán, and after some days returned to his country. The Sultán went to Muhammadábád.

¹ According to the Tabakát-i-Akbari, the name of the envoy was Yád-gar Beg and he and his forty men were Kasil-báshes or Shiah Turks, who wear tall red hats.

² The text is dar-an-siláah, which literally rendered, means, in that district. The Mir-ati Ahmedi has dar-siláshi-an which would mean 'by the side of it.' According to Farihtah he gave Baroda the name of Daulatábád.

It so happened that one day the followers of Sultán Muhammad had a dispute with the men of the ambassador of Ismáíl Sháh. Sultán Muhammad had an exceedingly valuable diamond and the ambassador Ibráhim wished to purchase it, but was unable to do so on account of the great price demanded. Some enmity sprang up on both sides. The prince, who was but an inexperienced youth, went one night with several men to the house of an old friend of his, and it so happened that this person lived in a part of the same Sarái in which Mir Ibráhim was residing. Some designing and evil disposed person told Mir Ibráhim that the prince intended to fly, and desired to loot the houses and property of the Persians. If, therefore, he could imprison him that night his act would to-morrow please the Sultán. The Mir not thinking of what might result, closed the Sarái door, and at midnight seized the prince and imprisoned him in his own quarters. The prince suffered much annoyance from this proceeding. In the morn'g he was released and his friends and followers assembling, proclaimed in the bazaar that an order had been issued to plunder the properties of the tall hat-wearers. As the confinement and annoyance suffered by the prince had caused much popular displeasure and excitement immediately on hearing this, a crowd collected at the gate of Mír Ibráhim's Sardí, and the red-hat-wearing Kazilbáshes stood ready to repulse them and protect their property. When overpowered by the numerical superiority of their assailants, the gate of the Sarái was burst open and the rioters having killed several of the Kazilbáshes, set fire to the houses and commenced to rob them. When the Sultán heard of this, he ordered Malik-ush-Shark-Imádul-mulk to go with the royal elephants, to stop the disturbance and take care that no harm should befall the Kazilbáshes, and to punish the ring-leaders of the affray. Imádul-mulk went, and suppressed the tumult, and having punished the rioters of low degree took care that Mír Ibráhim should sustain no injury, and brought him and his followers to the king's apartments. The king allotted a place for their residence in the palace. Mír Ibráhim now represented that he had been robbed of six lákhs of tánkás of money and property. At that time one Gujarát tánká was worth eight Murádi tánkás, as at this moment these tánkás are current in Khándesh and the Dakhan. The Sultán paid this sum from his treasury. On Friday, the 14th of the month of Ramazán, he dismissed the ambassador after presenting him with a lákhs of tánkás in cash and a handsome dress of honour. He sent Khurásán Khán with him to escort him and to strengthen the loosened bonds of friendship and unity between him and the king of the Irák. He further sent seven huge elephants with wonderful trappings, a rhinoceros,¹ and wonderful birds and beasts and much handsome cloth and other presents for Ismáíl Sháh with the abovementioned Khurásán Khán, and he provided two large ships for the embarkation of Mírza Ibráhim and his property. After this occurrence, the kindness that the Sultán entertained for Sultán Muhammad, underwent a slight change, and at the invitation of some of his amírs Sultán Muhammad left Gujarát without taking leave of the Sultán. Sultán Mehmúd, the son of Násiruddín discovering this, and that his amírs were discontented, assembled an army of Hindus, gave their chief the title of Medáni Rái, and entrusted the entire management of his kingdom to his hands. Medáni Rái collecting his relations and adherents raised a large army of unbelievers and fought a battle with Sultán Muhammad. Khwájáh Jahán was slain, Sultán Muhammad defeated, and the entire Government of Mándu fell into the hands of Medáni Rái, to such an extent that he conferred all the chief posts about the court on his own relations and found occasion to slay the Musalmán nobles and leading men of the Sultán one after another. The Hindus commenced the oppression and violence natural to them, and introduced such evil customs and changes that the condition of the Musalmán dwellers in the capital and other cities of Mándu became unbearable. Sultán Muzaffar heard of these occurrences, and learned that after many years the rule of the Hindus had again returned to Málwá, and that no power remained to Sultán Mehmúd beyond the mere name of king, which also would shortly disappear. Sultán Muzaffar writhed with pain at all this and took upon himself the duty of removing these Hindus. He ordered an army to be collected and himself came from Muhammadábád to Ahmedábád, and visited the shrines of Kutbul-másháikh-Sheikh Ahmed Khattú and Hazrat Kutb-i-Álam and his sons, all saints of high degree, and visiting the tombs of his ancestors he besought them to give him resolution, grace and help, and after remaining a week in Ahmedábád he returned to Muhammadábád.

¹ My MS. has the Persian word Karkhan which means a rhinoceros and not Gurg or wolf as I find given in the other copies and the translation by Sir Olie Bayley. I think my copy is here correct, as sending a wolf to Persia would be no curiosity.

MARCH OF SULTÁN MUZAFFAR TO MÁLWÀ TO EXPEL THE HINDUS AND HIS ARRIVAL IN THE TOWN OF DHÁR AND HIS RETURN FROM THAT COUNTRY.

In the month of Shawwál A. H. 918 (A. D. 1512) having marched from Ahmedábád in the direction of Mándu, to drive away the unbelievers and aid the Musalmáns, he encamped some days in the town of Godhráh to concentrate the army. At this time news was received that Áinul-mulk, fief holder of Nehrwalá, otherwise called Pattan, was on his way to pay his respects to the Sultán when the Rájá of Ídar Bhím, son of Bhán, issued forth, and ravaged the country on the banks of the river Sábarmati. Áinul-mulk drew an army towards Ídar to repulse him and plundered and laid waste the Ídar country. When Áin-ul-Mulk arrived about three kos from Ídar, the Rájá of Ídar came with a large army and joined battle. Áhdul-mulk, brother of Áinul-mulk, together with many others, was slain. Áinul-mulk was defeated, and came to Pattan. The Sultán changed his intention of going to Málwá, and turned in the direction of Ídar, and arrived by forced marches to Morásá, and there prepared his forces against the Ídar Rájá and ravaged and plundered his country. The Rájá of Ídar fled to the mountains, and on the fourth day the Sultán marching from Morásá pitched his camp near Ídar, and ordered that the houses, palaces and temples of Ídar should be so destroyed, that neither their name nor sign could remain. This happened in A. H. 919 (A. D. 1514). When the Rájá of Idar heard of this he begged for the intercession of Malik Gopi, who was originally a Brahman and one of the vazirs of the Sultán. Malik Gopi obtained from the Sultán forgiveness of his fault.

As the Sultán was anxious to chastise the Hindus of Málwá, he overlooked his fault and having levied from him the tribute agreed on, he returned to Godhráh, and thence sent Prince Sikandar Khún to Muhammadábád, and he himself went towards Málwá. When he arrived at Dohad, he ordered the fort to be repaired, and marched thence. When he passed the Deolah defile, which is very difficult, he halted there for three days, and to keep open his communications appointed Safdar Khún to be the thánodár of the place. At this camp the son of the mukaddam (the head-man or chief citizen) of the town of Dhár, which is a dependency of Málwá, came and having had an audience of the Sultán asked for protection. The Sultán sent Kiwámul-mulk Sárang with several other nobles to convey his assurance of protection to the inhabitants of Dhár. At this juncture news was brought that Sultán Mehmúd Násiruddin and Medáni Rái had gone in the direction of Chanderi, because Sultán Muhammad brother of Sultán Mehmúd, who after the defeat above described had taken refuge with Sultán Sikandar Lodi having obtained aid from him, had come and had taken possession of certain territories of Chanderi. Sultán Muzaffar said: "In bringing the army here it was not my desire to take the country of Málwá from Sultán Mehmúd, a Musalmán king. I only wished to expel Medáni Rái and others, and to make peace between the two brothers. Sultán Mehmúd is at present in great difficulty, and I will see how it ends, and then do what the occasion demands." He then ordered Kiwámul-mulk to come from Dhár. Kiwámul-mulk, on his return from Dhár, so praised the deer park which had been constructed there according to the orders of Ghiásuddin, that the Sultán desired to see it, and having left Kiwámul-mulk at the camp and taking with him 12,000 fully equipped horsemen and 150 elephants he started to see the deer park and encamped near the tank of Dhár. Some amírs now represented that it would be a good thing to make an attack on Mándu. But the Sultán replied that it was not well to visit a house in the absence of its master. On that day he performed the afternoon prayers at the shrines of Sheikh Kamál of Málwá and Sheikh Abdulláh Changál, who are buried in the vicinity of the town of Dhár. The people of the town, great and small coming out to meet the Sultán blessed and praised him. Next morning he gave Nizámul-mulk Sultáni and Razí-ul-mulk and Ikhtiárul-mulk and Malik Chaman, who had the title of Muzaffar Khán, and Saif Khán, leave to go and see the pleasant palaces of the deer park and return the same day and report what sort of a place it was. He also himself got ready to set out to see the deer park. When evening came, and the amírs did not return, the Sultán said: "What is it? When they know that I am going to visit Diláwarah too". So saying, he started for Diláwarah, but did not find the nobles there. Alif Khán said: "Perhaps Nizámul-mulk has gone to Naálchah to see his brother Rái Singh, who lives there." The Sultán saw the Diláwaráh palaces, and returned to Dhár. After evening prayers news arrived that Nizámul-mulk was returning, having obtained a victory. The Sultán asked: "What victory?" They said that as Nizámul-mulk was coming from Naálchah, the Hindus who were in the fort of Mándu issuing, pursued and overtook him. Nizámul-mulk turning back, fought them. Forty of the Hindus were slain and the remainder escaped to the fortress, and Nizámul-mulk, triumphant and victorious, set out to join the Sultán. The Sultán was greatly enraged, and spoke harshly to Nizámul-mulk and said, "Wherefore did you go thither without orders? Had the battle ended in a reverse and had you been obliged to fly, whose would have been the disgrace?" On the third day the Sultán returned from Dhár to his camp, and thence set out to return to his capital. The author of the Tárikh-i-Bábadur-Sháhi says that being on personal attendance on the Sultán during this campaign, he was an eye-witness of the events he has recorded. In short, the Sultán returned to Muhammadábád.

In A. H. 920 (A. D. 1514) news came that Ráimál nephew of Ráo Bhím, Rájá of Idár, after the death of the aforesaid Rájá, encouraged by Rána Sंगा, Rájá of Chitor, had expelled Bhármál, son of Bhím from Idár, and had seized on the throne. The Sultán was not pleased at this and said, Bhím enjoyed the throne of Idár under his authority, and that he was surprised the Rána had dared to help Ráimal to oust Bhármal. He ordered Nizámul-mulk, fief-holder of Ahmednagar, to remove Ráimal from Idár and hand it over to Bhármal, son of Bhím. The Sultán then himself proceeded to Ahmednagar, eventually returning thence to Ahmedábád. Afterwards in A. H. 923 (A. D. 1515-16) Ráimal had many engagements with the army of the Sultán in which he was sometimes victorious, but more frequently defeated. While the Sultán was passing the rainy season at Ahmedábád in pleasure and enjoyment, the Málwá amírs Habíb Khán, Sheikh Chánd, and others flying from Medáni Rái, came to the Sultán, and related the oppression practised by the followers of Medáni Rái, and how the religion and precepts of Islám were being done away with at Mándu, how Medáni Rái had killed the principal men, while others having fled from their country were dispersed, how he meant shortly to kill Sultán Mehmúd or having drawn the hot iron over his eyes to blind him and imprison him. The Sultán hearing the overbearing conduct of the Hindus made a fixed determination saying, God willing, he would certainly march to Mándu after the rainy season and crush Medáni Rái and re-establish the rule of Islám in Málwá.

They say that when Sultán Mehmúd saw that all his country and treasure had passed into the hands of Medáni Rái, and that nothing remained to him, the Sultán, but the name, he desired to escape from Mándu. He went forth on the pretence of hunting and remained for some days occupied in that pursuit. One day he rode out from morning till evening. The Hindus who were placed over him as guards went to sleep from the fatigue of the hunting and except Medáni Rái's chosen men, no one remained with the Sultán. He was kept under a system of surveillance so jealous that if he drank water, it was a Hindu who gave him to drink, and if he desired to eat, no other than a Hindu brought him his food. Even the grooms and porters around him were Hindus. Amongst his Hindu guards was a Rájput of the name of Krishna, an inhabitant of the town of Kharal. As he was a land-holder of Málwá, he served the king with a more sincere fidelity than the other Rájputs. The Sultán said to him, " Krishna, I am weary of this life, and sore distressed. Could you not get two horses from the stables and show me the way to Gujarát that I may go to Sultán Muzaffar and get aid from him to punish these scoundrels. If you can do this, do it at once, and if God wills you will be abundantly rewarded." Krishna agreed, and at midnight brought two horses from the Sultán's stables. The Sultán mounted one horse, and on the other he seated his favourite wife whose name was Ráni Kanákur.¹ Krishna leading the way took the road to Gujarát and travelling half the night and the whole of the following day they arrived at Bhánkorah, a village on the Gujarát frontier. As their horses were fatigued, they alighted under a tree near the village. Next day news of their arrival reached Kaisar Khán, the governor of Dohad, which is ten kos from Bhánkorah. Kaisar Khán came to attend on the Sultán and having paid him royal homage continued serving him and supplying the royal wants. He sent off a swift camel-rider informing Sultán Muzaffar of the arrival of Sultán Mehmúd as he had witnessed it. Sultán Muzaffar was pleased, and at once sent off good Arabian horses with gold saddles and bejewelled bridles, and elephants like mountains with housings of velvet, embroidered with gold, and kingly vestments, and well-trained slave-girls, and handsome slave-boys, together with treasure, and an establishment under the orders of renowned amírs, and wrote a letter of welcome expressive of his delight and the chagrin his enemies would experience at Sultán Mehmúd's arrival and requesting him to consider the Sultán's victorious army as arrived to escort him, God willing to destroy those treacherous Hindus and hand over Mándu and the country of Málwá to Sultán Mehmúd's servants.

When the Sultán's army approached Sultán Mehmúd, he went to meet it. All the amírs alighting from their horses kissed his feet. At the same time they pitched lofty regal tents with red walls and with all regal appurtenances. Sultán Mehmúd, glad and joyful, entered the tent, and the amírs alighted and took up quarters round the royal tent. When the spies of Medáni Rái saw and reported this to him, the hearts of the Hindus began to quake with terror. Two days after the sending of these amírs, on Thursday the 4th of the month of Zilkadd A. H. 928 (A. D. 1517), Sultán Muzaffar, with the intention of a religious war, placed his auspicious foot in the stirrup of good fortune. The author of the Tárikh-i-Bahádur-Sháhi says that when the Sultán resolved on the conquest of Mándu, the great men and nobles in obedience to the Sultán's wishes occupied themselves in reading the whole of the Kuraán. The Sultán sought the omen of victory by opening the holy book at random and drawing his omen from the last verse. The last verse on the page he thus opened was this :—¹

¹ The word is either Kanak-Kuar or Kanis or Kanya Kuar.

"And they defeated them by God's will, and David slew Goliath and God gave him kingdom and wisdom and taught him what He willed. And if God had not prevented men, the one by the other, verily the earth had been corrupted : but God is beneficent towards his creatures."

After this consultation of the omen from the Kuraán, the Sultán, certain of victory, by confidence in that verse, marched from Muhammadábád on Thursday the 11th of Zilkad. After three days' march he arrived at Godhra, and on Sunday the 21st of the above, he bade adieu to Prince Sikandar Khán on his departure for Muhammadábád, and taking Princes Latíf Khán and Bahádúr Khán with him, he marched towards Muzaffarábád, and on Tuesday the 27th of the above month pitched his camp with good fortune and prosperity at the village of Bháncorah. On Wednesday the 9th of Zilhajj while at this camp, news arrived that Sultán Sikandar king of Delhi had resigned his life unto his Creator, and that his son Sultán Ibráhím had ascended the throne. Sultan Muzaffar remained in that camp, and performed the third day ceremonies for the dead. On Friday the 11th of the above month he resumed his march and halted at Dhanigám, and on Monday the 14th of the above month he encamped at Deolah, and on Tuesday the 15th he met Sultán Mehmúd and gave him a right royal reception and so consoled him that Sultán Mehmúd found rest from the troubles of evil fortune, the privations of travel, and the treachery of his evil-disposed enemy. On Friday the 18th, he brought his victorious standards to Dhár. Medáni Rái who had remained in Dhár with the idea of opposing Sultán Muzaffar in battle fled to Ujjain and sent Rái Pithaura, Bhím-karan, Shád Khán, Budhan, Gángu, and Ugra Sen who were the chief men of his army, to defend the fort of Mándu. On Sunday the 23rd, the Sultán with his army pitched his tents round Mándu, and prepared his batteries to invest the place. He appointed Kaisar Khán over the Dehli gate battery, and he nominated Malik Imádul-mulk to command the battery at another gate. He surrounded the fortress on all sides. At this time Medáni Rái sent word to the garrison to negotiate and obtain a month's delay from the Sultán, pretending that they would surrender the fort after that period, and that in the meantime he would obtain such an army to their aid from the Ráná (of Chitor) that Sultán Muzaffar would have to leave the fort without fighting and return to Gujarát. The Hindus began to use their vulpine wiles, and on Friday the 25th, the third day of the siege, Pithaura with several of his followers and relatives sent suitable presents to Kaisar Khán and Khudáwand Khán, and asked for quarter, and requested time for the besieged to bring out their families and hand over the fort to the Sultán's servants. Kaisar Khán and Khudáwand Khán brought them to the Sultán's presence. The Sultán granted them a safe reception and a truce for one month. The Hindus made a pretence of vacating the fort while they secretly wrote to Medáni Rái that they had accomplished his wish, asking him to do without fail what he could.

¹ The Kuraán. Chapter—The cow. See Sale's Translation of the Kuraán (chap. II, p. 36).

Medáni Rái went to the Ráná and said, "No one among us is greater than you in all India. If not now when will you aid us who are of your race?" He agreed to give the Ráná on condition of his aid several fine elephants from the stables of Sultán Mehmúd, and several fine jewels from his treasury which were in his possession. The Ráná said, "I will come to Sárangpur and there take the jewels and elephants, and after that will act as may seem fit." The Ráná started accordingly for Sárangpur, a town under Málwá fifty kos from Mándu. with a great army. When this news reached the Sultán, the deceit and cunning of the garrison became apparent. He sent Ádil Khán Asiri and Malik Kiwámul-mulk Sárang with brave and intrepid amirs and picked fighting men against the Ráná, and ordered his own army to press the siege and put out their best efforts. The soldiers now made such strenuous efforts that on the third day, being the 2nd of the month of Safar they conquered the fortress, and put a large number of the unbelievers to the sword. They say that the number of the slain was 19,000. The author of the "Muzaffar Sháhi" says, that 40,000 were slain with 57 leaders of note.—God best knows the truth! The names of the Hindu leaders were these:—Pithaura, Udaikarán; Káhándeó and Ajáebdeó, Gházi Khán, and Shádi Khán, Ratanchand, Mánekchand, Bahádur Khán, Daulat Khán, Akhéchand, Kiratchand, Dúngarshi, and Gángu, Bikramsi and Mále Khán, Rái Jagat, Dharamsingh, Bhánsingh, Jetsingh, Fateh Khán and their sons and the sons of Thákarshi and Kákarha, and others. This occurred in A. H. 924 (A. D. 1518) as is gatherable from the last of the following verses:—

"Muzaffar Sháh conquered Mándu, the former capital of which was Dhár.
If you ask for the date of his victory,
It is the frustration of all unbelievers."

The date is also obtainable from the Arabic words : " Kad-fatahal. Māndu-Sultānuna." Our Sultān has, verily, conquered Māndu.

In the above lines, the word پريشانی : 'frustration' supplies the numerical value from its letters.

Sayad Jalālūddīn Munawwarul-mulk Bukhāri and another eye-witness of these events record that in this conflict the Muslim army was helped by unseen and miraculous hosts. He says:—"After the defeat of the Hindus and after their opening the gates of the fortress to us, some of us agreed to go out for a stroll in the newly conquered city. We went up to the fort and were looking at the mansions and wherever we encountered a Hindu of the militant class we killed him, till we reached a mansion the doors of which were closed from within. We thought there must be Hindus within who must, for security, have closed the doors. With the name of Allāh we broke open the door and went in and found the house quite untenanted except the room of a sub-terranean, where forty Hindus were lying with their throats cut weltering in their blood. One of them had a little life left, and could reply to our questions. We asked him how it was he had been killed with closed doors. He said he and his companions had closed the doors for safety, but that a supernatural hand clenching a sword had appeared and killed them all."

In short the Sultān arrived victorious and triumphant in the lofty fortress, when some of his well-wishers represented that it would not be proper to hand over to Sultān Mehmūd the country of Mālwa which was of greater extent than Gujarāt, and which had only come into their hands after such troubles and hardships and the conquest of which had cost them the lives of 10,000 veterans.

Verse.

"No one can obtain a kingdom as ancestral property, Until he shall have struck many blows with the double-bladed sword."

Immediately on hearing this speech the Sultān came down from the fortress, and said to Sultān Mehmūd, "Take care that none of my men remain up in the fortress."

Sultán Mehmúd said, " All the good fortune and happiness that I now enjoy is through your favour. I have come by all, my kingdom wealth and family, through your Majesty. If you will remain a few days up here in the fortress, it will be a great honour to me." The Sultán replied, " If God wills on the third day hence I will be your guest. At present it is best as it is," Although Sultán Mehmúd tried to force him much, he would not consent.

They say that after some time one of the Sultán's companions asked the reason of his descending so quickly from the fort. He replied : " People were endeavouring to persuade me not to hand over the fortress to Sultán Mehmúd, and I had set out on this expedition only as a religious war. I feared lest, God forbid, some temptation should creep into my heart, and drive me to a conduct which neither justice nor good faith could warrant. I therefore descended quickly, and gave evil thoughts no place, and in this act I showed no favour to Sultán Mehmúd. It was rather he who showed a favour to me, as I have through him arrived at the good fortune of performing a virtuous deed, and have been rewarded by the accomplishment of my desires."

The history of the jewelled waist-belt is this :—When Sultán Kutbuddín, son of Sultán Muhammad, defeated Sultán Mehmúd Khilji at the battle of Kapadwanj, there was such a slaughter as could not be exceeded. By chance, in the heat of the fray, which resembled the day of judgment, the ward-robe-keeper of Sultán Kutbuddín, in whose charge was the jewelled belt, was by the restiveness of his horse carried into the ranks of the enemy. The animal there became so violent that the ward-robe-keeper fell from it and was captured by the enemy and the jewelled belt was taken from him and given to Sultán Mehmúd of Málwa. This jewelled waist-belt was in the Málwá treasury at the time the Mándu fortress was taken by the strength of the arm of Sultán Muzaffar. Sultán Mehmúd sent this belt together with a fitting sword and horse, to Sultán Muzaffar by the hands of his son who had been freed from imprisonment of the Hindus, on the day the fort was conquered, and begged him to come and be his guest. The Sultán agreeing gave his son leave with honour and presents. Sultán Mehmud, by way of showing his joy, ordered the city to be illuminated, and having adorned the palaces, he caused a kingly banquet to be spread. They say that Sultán Mehmúd took such trouble in this reception, that for magnificence it could not be exceeded. On the 11th Safar agreeably to his promise Sultán Muzaffar ascended the fortress. The great and small of Mándu, even the pardáh ladies and children, appeared on their walls and balconies to witness the procession, and blessed and praised the Sultán. Sultán Mehmúd behaved with great hospitality and showed great humility and after the banquet he showed the Sultán over the palaces. In the course of this they came to a mansion in the centre of which was a building in the form of a quadrangle, ¹ carved and gilded, and round it were a number of apartments. When the Sultán placed his foot within the threshold of that building, the ladies of the harem of Sultán Mehmúd, having apparelled and ornamented themselves magnificently, all at once opened the doors of their chambers and burst into view like houris and fairies. They say that Sultán Mehmúd had one thousand beautiful women in his harem.

The Sultáns of Mándu had reached such a pitch of luxury and ease that it is impossible to imagine aught exceeding it. Among them especially Sultán Ghiásuddin was so famous for his luxurious habits that at present if any one exceeds in luxury and pleasure-seeking they say that he is a second Ghiásuddin. The orders of this Sultán were that no event of a painful nature or one in which there was any touch of sadness should be related to him. They say that during his entire reign news of a sad nature was only twice conveyed to him. Once, when his son-in-law died, and his daughter was brought before him clothed in white garments. On this occasion the Sultán is related to have simply said : "Perhaps her husband is dead." He said so because the custom of the people of India is that when the husband of a woman dies, she gives up wearing coloured clothes. The second occasion was, when the army of Sultán Bahlúl Lodi plundered several of the districts of Chanderi. Though it was necessary to report this to the Sultán, yet his ministers were unable to communicate it to him. They, therefore, asked a band of actors (bhānds) to assume the dress of Afgháns and mentioning the districts to act their being pillaged and laid waste. The actors did so. Sultán Ghiásuddin exclaimed in surprise : "But is the Governor of Chanderi dead that he does not take vengeance on the country of the Afgháns for the injuries done to his districts ? ”

¹ The text has the words—Kāshah-wár—like the Kaábah or Temple of Makkah which is also quadrangular.

To resume, the ‘harim’ of Sultán Mehmúd appeared like peacocks from Paradise with trays full of precious stones to scatter them over the head of the Sultán.¹ The recital of this verse is appropriate to that event.

COUPLET :—

“ Houris were drawn up in a line for a look at my love,
The boys of Paradise in astonishment clapped their hands.”

When the eyes of Sultán Muzaffár fell on their charms he bowed his head and said : “ To look at other than one’s own wives is a sin. Sultán Mehmúd said : “ All these are my property and you have purchased me by your kindness. Now according to the dictum of law the slave and his property belong to his master, thus they are lawful for you, and they are all a present to you.” The Sultán replied : “ I wish you joy of them, let them retire to the pardáh.” At a single signal of Sultán Mehmúd they all vanished like fairies. The Sultán then came forth and all that day and night remained as a guest of Sultán Mehmúd. After the noon-prayers on the next day he took leave. Sultán Mehmúd presented magnificent presents, in the shape of Arab and Turkish horses, elephants like mountains, stuffs of different colour and jewels of different sorts. They say that from the time Sultán Mehmúd had left Mándu to solicit the help of Sultán Muzaffar, Medáni Rái had made no alteration in the allowances of the ladies of Sultán Mehmúd’s harim in matters such as clothes, perfumes, and ready money ; that he used to supply them with these things without let or hindrance, and their gold and jewels remained in their own hands. Each day he used to come into the Durbár and send his respects to them and used to say : “ I have not committed any treason that the Sultán has become aggrieved and has gone away. Please represent to the Sultán to come and take charge of his country and entrust the vazarat to another. I agree to always carry his shoes.” With words of this kind he used to go, and the rules of looking after the Zenáná were carried on by the eunuchs just in the same way in which they used to be enforced when the Sultán was present.

¹ Scattering gold or silver coins or precious stones over the head of a bridegroom or conqueror is a form of sacrifice common in the East. The scattered coin is scrambled for by the crowd and with it pass away to the crowd the spirits of evil hovering over the head of the victor.

In short on the day the fortress was conquered, Shádi Kkán and Gángo who were amírs of the highest rank of the garrison were slain, and Hemkaran and Budhan issued alive from a wicket, and went to Medáni Rái.

They say that the garrison were so impressed with the terrors of the slaughter at the storming of the fort that Budhan after telling Medáni Rái some terrible accounts of the fate of the garrison asked for water, and immediately on drinking it fell down and died. On seeing this Medáni Rái and the Ráná became greatly alarmed. Medáni Rái said, "my relations and kinsmen have all been destroyed, my wife and children have fallen into the hands of the Musalmáns. Now of what use is life to me." Saying so he attempted to kill himself. The Ráná stopped him and took him with him to Chitor. They say that they travelled thirty-seven kos in one night. Ádil Khán of Asír, who was at Wabálpur, which is fifteen kos from Mándu, heard of the flight of the Ráná, informed the Sultán of it, and asked permission to pursue him. The Sultán saw no advantage in the pursuit, and sent for Ádil Khán to join him, and himself returned towards his capital. Sultán Mehmúd accompanied him as far as Deolah, and there Sultán Muzaffar gave him leave to depart after ordering Asaf Khan with several other amírs to go with Sultán Mehmúd and remain with him to help him. He also gave leave to Ádil Khán at this camp to return to Asír and Burhánpúr. He himself came thence with great pomp to Idar, and stayed there a few days for hunting, and thence came to Muhammadábád, and spent all the rains at this capital in pleasure and enjoyment. The soldiers rested from the fatigues and after the discomforts of a long campaign.

In A. H. 925 (A. D. 1520) news arrived that Sultán Mehmúd had marched on Karwan. Hemkaran, of whom mention has been made above, held that place. In the battle he fell by the Sultán's hands. On account of this it was reported that the Ráná collecting a large army advanced against Sultán Mehmúd, and a great battle was fought. The end of the matter was that Sultán Mehmúd fell wounded into the hands of the Ráná, his army was defeated, and many Muhammadans were killed. On hearing of this occurrence the Sultán was much concerned, and sent an army to protect the Mándu fortress. The Ráná on hearing this turned back, and went to Chitor, his capital.

They say that when Sultán Mehmúd fell wounded on the field, some men of the Ráná's army ran and informed him. The Ráná came in person, and having placed Sultán Mehmúd with all honour in a palanquin carried him away to Chitor, and from fear of the Musalmán kings who were round the Mándu territory such as Sultán Ibráhím Lodi, king of Delhi, Sultán Muzaffar, king of Gujarát, and others he treated Sultán Mehmúd with great courtesy.¹ When the Sultán's wounds were healed, he, with great honour, accompanied him for several stages, and then gave him leave: the Ráná kept the son of the Sultán with him as a hostage, so that the Sultán should not take his revenge. Sultán Mehmúd came to Mándu.

In the above year Sultán Muzaffar came from Muhammadábád to Ídar, and having for some time remained engaged in hunting in the game-preserves, appointed the son of the uncle of the vazír, Malík Húsain who had the title of Nizám Khán, and who was in bravery and courage the Rustam of the age, as thánédár of Ídar in place of Nasratul-mulk, and then returned to Ahmedábád. The vazírs showed displeasure at this. The Sultán said, "I have selected this man as the best out of you all, and your grief now is of no avail." On account of this the vazírs were inimical to Nizám Khán and sought his ruin. In A. H. 926 (A. D. 1524) a Bhát or Rájput bard in Nizám Khán's assembly said, "At present there is not a Rájáh in Hindustán like the Ráná who assists Ráemal. How long so ever you may remain in Ídar, Ráemal is bound to take it." "What dog is he," returned Nizám Khán, "who shall dare to aid Ráemal, while I am here; if he is a man why does he not come?" The bard replied, "His arrival is near." Nizám Khán replied, "If he comes not, he is a dog;" and he further took a dog and chained him and said, "If the Ráná does not come, he is like this dog." The bard departed, and went to the Ráná and related what had passed. The Ráná in anger coiled up like a snake, and at once pitched his tent outside the town, and came by forced marches to Sirohi. On hearing this news the Sultán desired to send aid to Ídar, but the Sultán's ministers who were inimical to Nizám Khán said, "How dare the Ráná to fight with the Sultán's servants?" In the meantime the couriers reported that the Ráná had returned to Chitor, and this information was at that time correct.

¹ It is a pity the author does not understand the chivalrous courtesy of the Síodia Rájput who, though surrounded on all sides and even when hard pressed by the arms of Islám, maintained his independence and honour.

The Sultán placing Kiwámul-mulk in charge of Ahmedábád, himself went to Muhammadábád. The Ráná turned back and went towards the country of Wágadh which lies to the east of Idar. Nizám Khán sent to inform the Sultán that the Ráná with 40,000 horse had turned towards Wágadh intending to invade Ídar. He also reported that the usual strength of the contingent under his command at Idar, was 5,000 horse, of whom many had gone to Ahmedábád.

The vazírs in their enmity to Nizám Khán did not present this petition to the Sultán. Great men have said:—"What great fabrics of power have ministers malevolent of mind and crafty of counsel not brought to ruin and what heads have they not caused to roll. It behoves rulers to exercise judgment and discrimination not to appoint such men as ministers." In short, there was delay in sending aid, and the Ráná made a rapid descent upon Ídar. Nizám Khán who in those days had been ennobled by the title of Mubárizul-mulk, determined to join battle, the following day, but his followers restrained him saying that the Ráná had come to the attack with 40,000 horse, and that their 900 horse were nothing in comparison, and they added that his idea would not be pleasing to the Sultán, and that in the event of a defeat it would bring disgrace on the kingdom. Nizám Khán, however, remained firm to his purpose, and after much discussion, it was settled that they should go to Ahmednagar, and, strengthening the fort, fight with cannons and muskets until assistance should arrive, when they would fight a pitched battle. They took Mubáriz Khán with them whether he would or no and went to Ahmednagar. There were some men however in Ídar who were the Sultán's own troopers (silehdárs). These men agreed among themselves to die martyrs and remained in Ídar in such a way that Mubáriz Khán did not become aware of it. When the Ráná came to Ídar, they issued forth and fought, and became martyrs. The chief of them was Malik Sajan or Sheikhan Utheria, and he was induced to take this course by the fact that the vazírs had said to him:—"The Malik will some day do such an act as will bring a load of shame on Mubáriz Khán."

They say that a bard had composed some verses in praise of Mubáriz Khán in which he had compared the Ráná's army with cranes, and Mubáriz Khán's men with falcons. When the Ráná came near Idar, he said to the bard, "Where now are those falcons that you spoke of?" At this time the men who were in the fortress issued forth, and the men who were in the front of the Ráná's army, fled. The bard said, "Here come the falcons I spoke of." In short on his way to Ahmednagar Mubáriz Khán met Khizr Khán, Asad Khán, Gházi Khán, Shujá-ál-mulk and Saiful-Mulk who were coming from Ahmednagar. They said to Mubáriz Khán, "You should have stayed in Ídar, where we also were coming to fight the Ráná together with you. For the idea that it may be said that we took shelter within the walls of a fort for fear of this unbeliever cannot be endured, in case he comes to Ahmednagar to-morrow. We shall fight in the plain. Under these circumstances it would have been better had we fought him at Ídar." Mubáriz Khán said, "My friends counselled me that it was necessary to go to Ahmednagar though I was not of their mind. Now the counsel is yours, and I also am of your opinion." As they had met near Ahmednagar, they went to Ahmednagar. In the morning arraying themselves, they came out and drew up their army and stood ready. They were in all 1,200 horse and 1,000 foot armed with muskets. A day did not elapse before the army of the Ráná appeared like a mountain on all sides, and of the army (of Islám) 1,200 horse and 900 foot of the followers of Mubáriz Khán and 400 cavalry belonging to the other amírs determined to fight to the death. Advancing with the cry of Allah! Allah! they sought battle and attacked the enemy's van and routed it, and attacked the centre, and dispersed it also, and thus they defeated 20,000 of the Ráná's cavalry, and killing and striking they thus advanced one kos till they were out of sight of the army that followed them. The men in their rear thought that they must all have been slain. They, therefore, showing their backs to the enemy, fled back to Ahmednagar. In short the death seeking gházis defeated the van and arrived at the centre, and broke it also. Ibráhím Khán and Gházi Khán and Sultán Shah who were the chiefs in this fight were killed with many others. Others fell wounded in the field, but few remained without a wound.

The followers of Mubáriz Khán saw that they were striking their heads against a mountain, and that their heads would be broken, while the mountain would receive no injury, so seizing him they drew him from the battle by main force, and set their face towards the fort of Ahmednagar, thinking that the fort was still in the hands of the garrison. When, however, they came to the fort gate, they saw that the garrison had left the fort before their arrival and fled. Accordingly Mubáriz Khán and Safdar Khán made for the town of Parántij, which lies about fifteen miles from Ahmednagar. Leaving the straight road, they went by another. But Asadul-mulk and others went by the straight road. The Hindus pursued and overtook Asadul-mulk. Asadul-mulk turning back gave battle, and was slain with his followers, and all his elephants and baggage fell into the enemy's hands. The Ráná encamped near Ahmednagar, plundered the city and imprisoned all the inhabitants. At night the Ráná assembled his advisers and took counsel. Some said that Ahmedábád was only fifty kos off that they would make a forced march and surprise it. The Ráná said: "Here were four hundred Muhammadans who have defeated twenty thousand and killed a thousand of your horse. If four thousand of their horse come against you, you would be no match for them. Besides none of my ancestors have ever come so far (even as this) or achieved such success. So for the present this must suffice." The Gujarát Garásiás who were with the Ráná, said, "If you do not choose to go to Ahmedábád, Wadnagar is near at hand, you should take it and return. The inhabitants of Wadnagar are merchants, and have much gold, so your army will return laden with booty." In the morning they marched accordingly to Wadnagar. Since the inhabitants of Wadnagar were all Brahmans, they came to the Ráná and said, "We have passed twenty-two generations here, and hitherto no one has either oppressed or persecuted us. Why do you, who are a Hindu sovereign, do so?" The Ráná gave up his intention of plundering Wadnagar but taking from them some tribute he departed, and camped near Bisánagar. The officer in charge of that place took shelter in the citadel. The Ráná's men tried to take it, but they defended it till the time of evening prayer. In this turmoil and confusion the town of Visalnagar was also sacked. At night a report was spread in the Ráná's army that Ainul-mulk, and Fateh Khán, governor of Pattan, had arrived. The army of the Ráná remained all night under arms and in the dawn at once started in the direction of Ídar. From Ídar the Rána went to his own country.

On the day of the battle Kiwámul-mulk, governor of Ahmedábád, had started from the city to the aid of Mubárizul-mulk, and had camped at the village of Walád which is seven kos from Ahmedábád. Several of the refugees from the defeated army arrived there and said that Mubáriz-ul-mulk, Safdar Khán, and Gházi Khán were slain. Kiwámul-mulk halting in that place wrote of the above rumour to the Sultán. On the third day it was discovered that Mubárizul-mulk and Safdar Khán were alive, and had alighted in the village of Rúpál which is in the district of Kari. The author of the Túrikh-i-Bahádur Sháhi writes that Kiwámul-mulk sent him to fetch Mubarizul-mulk in order that they might together pursue the Ráná. He says that he brought the Malik to Walád, and the Malik met Kiwámul-mulk when news arrived that the Ráná had marched from Idar by forced marches to Chitor. Mubárizul-mulk, and the writer of the Bahádur Sháhi left Kiwámul-mulk, and came to Ahmednagar. On the sixteenth day after the battle they buried the martyrs whose bodies were lying in the field and killed sixty of the Kántha Kolis who had come to Ahmednagar to purchase wheat. They remained one night in Ahmednagar, and in the morning as they could not get grain, they returned to the town of Burhání (Parántij ?). At this time they heard that Sultán Muzaffar had sent Ímáduł-mulk and Kaisar Khán with a powerful army and several large and fierce war elephants to their aid. This army arrived at Ahmedábád, and thence reached Walád and having effected a junction with Kiwámul-mulk, marched thence and arrived at the Kasba of Burhání (Parántij ?). A petition was from here written to the Sultán to the effect that the Ráná had gone to Chitor. If the Sultán gave the order, his slaves would proceed towards Chitor, and would endeavour to take their revenge. The Sultán wrote in reply that as the rainy season had arrived they should remain for the present at Ahmednagar, and that after the close of the rains he would also come and chastise the Rána.

The amírs coming to Ahmednagar remained there. After the rains the Sultán having increased the pay of the army, and having advanced to each soldier a year's pay that every man should provide himself with equipments of war, in the month of Shawwál of the abovementioned year himself marching from Muhammadábád encamped at Hálol three kos from Muhammadábád, and thence by forced marches came to Ahmedábád and put up in the Kehmdhrol palace near the Kánkarya Tank. At this time Malik Ayáz, governor of Sorath, with 20,000 horse and many pieces of cannon, and artillery men, arrived and had an audience and represented, "If this business be entrusted to me, I will God-willing bring the Rána alive a captive into the presence, or will slay him." The petition of Malik Ayáz pleased the Sultán, and in the month of Muharram A. H. 927 (A. D. 1520) he marched from Kehmdhrol to Harsole, and having sent for the army of Ahmedábád he joined that also to the army.

Malik Ayáz again repeated his request, and the Sultán presented him with a handsome present and permitted him to go.

The author of the Tárikh-i-Bahádur Sháhi writes that nearly a hundred thousand horsemen were appointed with Malik Ayáz and a hundred elephants, and twenty thousand horse and twenty elephants with Malik Kiwámul-mulk; and the two armies were allowed to depart. Malik Ayáz and Kiwámul-mulk went to Morása, and from Morása to the village of Rahmúlah which is under the country of Bágár.¹ Thence parties were appointed to ravage the entire country of Bágár as in the late disturbance the Rajá of Bágár had been an ally of the Rána, and Dúngarpúr, which was the place of residence of the Rája of Bágár, was burned and reduced to black ashes, and thence they went by way of Bánswára. By chance Shujá-ul-mulk, Safdur Khán, and Mujáhid Khán were once encamped with two hundred smart horsemen on the border of the camp, when a person came up to them and said, "The Rájá of Bánswúlú together with Medúni Rúi and his followers, have drawn up their forces and are standing on the hills about two kos from this. The aforesaid amirs with the men that were present mounted, and went in the direction of the hills. When the advanced guard of the Hindus saw from the heights that the Musalman army was coming with a few men, they opposed them and commenced to fight.

They say that like the noble companions of the Prophet, one footman engaged with eleven of the enemy. In the end the breeze of victory blew on the banners of Islám, and the faces of the unbelievers were covered with the dust of disgrace. In this fight eight Musalmáns and many Hindus fell beneath the sword. News of this engagement reached the camp and the army mounted to pursue the fugitive Hindus. By the time they met the army the amirs returned victorious and triumphant. On seeing the bravery of the Musalmáns, the Hindus were amazed and ashamed. The Most High made the army of the Musalmáns victorious according to the blessed Kuranic verse: "And how many a small body has defeated a great host by the aid of God."²

On hearing this news the Ráná was greatly alarmed. The Mahomedan General after this, having marched passed by the Kharji or Kharkhi Ghát, arrived by forced marches before and invested Mandisúr which belonged to the Ráná on whose behalf Rajput Asúkmal was posted there. They say that this fort was very strong, and its wall was ten cubits thick. It was constructed from the foundations to half its height of sand-stone, and the upper half was of baked bricks. It was one of the constructions of Sultán Hushang of Mándu. The Rána came with a large army and alighted near the village of Nadisi, which is ten kos from Mandisur. Malik Ayáz, began at once to dig mines and construct covered approaches round the fort, but Kiwámul-Mulk and the other nobles of the army were inwardly on bad terms with him. At this juncture the Ráná sent his rakil or agent to Malik Ayáz admitting his fault and stating that he had by his conduct closed the road of apology. He offered if his fault was kindly overlooked to subscribe to a written compact agreeing never to act again save as behoved a servant of the Sultán, and to send all the elephants, horses and prisoners that had fallen into his hands at the battle of Ahmednagar, and expressed his willingness to give besides this whatever the Sultán might appoint. At this time Sultán Mehmúd Khilji also came from Mándu and joined the Gujarát army. Silehdi, the Rajput also was coming from Ráesen to see Malik Ayáz, but Medáni Rái came and dissuaded him and lured him away to the Ráná. By-and-bye all the Rájús of those parts came round the Ráná, but no battle took place as was expected by Sultán Muzaffar and the friends of his kingdom nor did the Fort of Mandisúr fall. Malik Ayáz, to disappoint Kiwámul-Mulk and his party, and against their wishes, agreed to peace. Kiwámul-Mulk sent word to Sultán Mehmúd that if the Sultán would join the project, he would fight with the Ráná under his auspices. Sultán Mehmúd agreed, but as the General of the Gujarát army, Malik Ayáz, was a born slave of Sultán Muzaffar, and Sultán Mehmúd secretly did not wish that he should give him honour over the others, he purposely connived coming to an issue. Sultán Mehmúd was, besides, not anxious to fight, because the Ráná had behaved in a friendly way to him, and, as has been mentioned, his son was a hostage with the Ráná, and the Ráná had released him, and he had even agreed to pay the Ráná a tribute. Malik Ayáz without consulting the Sultán or Kiwámul-Mulk made peace with the Ráná, and marched on ten kos, and encamped there. Sultán Mehmúd said to Kiwámul-Mulk, "I act according to the orders of Sultán Muzaffar, nor would it become me to act contrary to his wishes." With these words Sultán Mehmúd marched for Mándu. The amírs, though they were very vexed and mortified, were powerless and the Malik turned towards Gujarát and came to Ahmedábád. The Sultán was very displeased and angry with the Malik and the people of Gujarát also condemned his conduct. The Sultán determined to march against the Ráná himself after the rainy season, and he gave Malik Ayáz leave to return to Sorath. The Sultán spent the rains at Muhammadábád and after the rainy season of A. H. 928 (A. D. 1521) left Muhammadábád, for the purpose of chastising the Ráná. When the Sultán reached Ahmedábád, the son of the Ráná came with the elephants, horses, and the tribute he had promised. The Sultán, therefore, stopped the expedition. After some time the Sultán went to hunt in Jháláwár, and after his return thence spent the hot season and the rains in Ahmedábád. After the rains, he dismissed the son of the Ráná. In this year Malik Ayáz died. When this news reached the Sultán he said, Malik Ayáz had reached the extremity of old age. Had he, he said, died in battle with the Ráná, he would have died a martyr. The Sultán conferred the post and rank of Malik Ayáz upon his eldest son and demanded the account and cash from the Sorath treasury. Malik Ishák sent the treasure with much valuable cloth stuffs, and the Sultán came to Muhammadábád from Ahmedábád by way of Kapadwanj and spent the rainy season there in pleasure and enjoyment.

¹ The orthography admits of the word being read Baksar as well as Wágár.

² See Sale's Translation of the Kurán, Chap. 11., p. 30.

In the beginning of A. H. 930 (A. D. 1523) he started for Morása, with a view of arranging the affairs of his own country, and thoroughly re-built that fort and arranged its defences. As the hot weather was near at hand he set out to return to Ahmedábád. On the road BÍbí Ráni, mother of Prince Sikandar Khán, passed away from this transitory world. She was one of the chief wives of Sultán Muzaffar. The Ráni was famed for her great good sense and for the motherly affection she showed to the ministers and officers of the state and to all gentle and simple. They buried her in the shrine of the mother of the Sultán which is near Khamdrole. The Sultán after halting three days came to Ahmedábád and suffered much grief and sorrow from the death of the Ráni, so much so that he fell ill. After recovery the Sultán came and passed the rainy season at Ahmedábád.

At this time Ádil Khán, the son of Sultán Behlul Lodi, who had come and taken up residence in this court in the time of Sultán Mehmúd, represented that his nephew Sultán Ibráhím having killed certain great nobles and displeased the soldiery, the greater part of the amirs had dispersed and had sent an invitation to him. If leave was given him he would go to Dehli. The Sultán having ordered provisions to be made for his departure gave him leave to go to Dehli. Ádil Khán went towards Dehli. He took the title of Sultán Alá-uddín and fought with Sultán Ibráhím, but being eventually unable to gain his object fled to the court of Zahírúddin Muhammad Bábar Pádshah at Cábul and persuaded that powerful king to invade Hindustan, thus bringing ruin upon his house.

COUPLET.

“ Dissension brings things to such a pass
That it brings ruin on old houses.”

In A.H. 931 (A.D. 1524) Sultán Muzaffar marched from Muhammadábád to Ahmedábád and several times went hunting to Morasa and returned to Ahmedábád for the hot weather. At this time Prince Bahádur Khán petitioned that the revenue of his jágír was insufficient for his expenses and said that he trusted his jágír must not be allowed to be less than that of Sikandar Khán. His petition was not acceded to. Bahádur Khán was much grieved at this. In the latter part of the month of Rajab, the seventh month of the Muslin calendar, of the same year, he formed an expedition to go to Dúngarpúr. At first Raja Ráésingh of Dúngarpúr had the honour of an interview and after staying there sometime he went to Chitor and met Rána Sंगा. What happened there shall be detailed in another place. Thence he went to the country of Mewát. Hasan Khán Mewáti who was the ruler of that place offered all his help. But he did not accept anything and went from thence to Sultán Ibráhím Lodi, while that Sultán was about to fight with Sultán Zahírudin Muhammad Bábar on the plain of Pánipat, 40 kos from Dehli. Sultán Ibráhím, sending for Bahádur Khán, received him with much honour and shewed him great kindness. On day a band of Mughals captured several men from the army of Sultán Ibráhím and were taking them away as prisoners. Bahádur Khán pursued and overtook them, and a conflict ensued which ended in Bahádur Khán's killing several Mughals and rescuing their prisoners and taking them back to Sultán Ibráhím's army. At this the people of Dehli praised and commended Bahádur Khán very highly. When Sultán Ibráhím heard of this, he became jealous of the popularity of Bahádur Khán, who on becoming aware of it left Sultán Ibráhím.

and set out for Jaunpur. Now, the nobles and people of Jaunpur were so discontented and weary of Sultán Ibráhím that they had sent a secret message to Bahádur Khán, that if ever he came to Jaunpur they would serve him heart and soul. While on his way to Jaunpur news came of the death of Sultán Muzaffar and he turned to go to Gujarát.

When Sultán Muzaffar came to know that Prince Bahádur Khán had gone away vexed to Baksar (Wágar?) he ordered his vazír Khudáwand Khán to write to him to return and that he would allot him a jágír equal to that of Sikandar Khán. Khudáwand Khán told the Sultán that Bahádur Khán had long left that place behind and had gone to Sultán Ibráhím Lodi. On hearing this, the Sultán was much pained and went from Ahmedábád to Muhammadábád. The above is on the authority of the Tárikh-i-Bahádúr Sháhi. I shall, please God, relate on a future occasion what has come down by way of unbroken tradition from respectable Gujarát authorities.

In those days rain fell not, and people began to wail and lament, and the Sultán raised his hands in supplication to the Almighty, saying: "God Almighty! if thou art visiting on this land thy displeasure for poor Muzaffar's crimes and sins, take him away and save thy people from the calamity of famine, for the humble Muzaffar cannot bear any longer to witness the want and sufferings of the poor and the needy." As the Sultán was a saintly person whose prayers were for the most part efficacious the rain of mercy fell, but the Sultán lost his appetite and sickened. He was, one day, reading a commentary on the sacred Kuráán of the name of Mu-ílím-ul-tanzí when he said he had read more in the days of his kingship than he did in those he was a prince. He had read half of that good book in this life, and hoped to be permitted to finish the other half in heaven. Those present began to praise him and pray for him, but he said, that each of his organs was losing its life, and that he was conscious of it. At last in the same year A. H. 932 (A.D. 1525) he went from Ahmedábád to Baroda, and said, he had done so to bid farewell to Baroda, which was his beloved home. "Now," said he, "let me return to the shrine of my honoured parent at Ahmedábád," and he returned by unbroken marches to Khamdrole and stopped there. Each day his weakness increased, and he did not touch food for a month. He used often during this period to visit the royal palaces in the city. Khurram Khán, one of his favourite attendants, asked permission to spend some money in charity, to which the Sultan replied: "My dear friend I have during my life spent so much from the public treasury that I am thinking how difficult it will be for me to account for it before my Glorious Maker. Why should I now add to the load?" At length people despaired of the Sultán, and Prince Latíf Khán seeing that Sikandar Khán was heir to the throne and apprehensive of his life from his hands, on the new moon of Jamádil Awwal issued forth with his establishment and set out for Baroda. Some say this was in consequence of an intimation from the dying Sultán. At last on the second day of the above month, after morning prayers the Sultán summoning Sikandar Khán to his presence, gave him advice befitting his royal rank, and exhorted him not to harm his brothers, nor to be rash in injuring his nobles on suspicion, a proceeding which would throw into disorder the affairs of the kingdom. Prince Sikandar Khán began to weep, and the Sultán bade him farewell. He then sent for a palanquin, and went to his horse and elephant stables, saying he had taken his last farewell of all, and as that day was a Friday, he would take his last farewell of the men of all his establishments, and ask their pardon. Saying so he visited all the establishments the servants of which with tearful eyes and sad hearts pardoned him. He now went to his bedroom in the palace and asked his attendants to remove his bed from the throne which, he said, belonged to his ancestors, and ordered it to be made on a cot, which he said, belonged to his successor. They did so. In the meantime he heard the call to Friday prayers, and on asking whether it was the time for prayers and on being told it was, he regretted he was not strong enough to attend the mosque, but sent some of his attendants to perform the Friday prayers. After an hour he made his ablutions and said his prayers, and with the greatest of unction and humility asked forgiveness for his sins, and having laid himself on his bed, he three times repeated the creed, and stretching forward his legs he rode the steed of his pure soul to Heaven. They consigned his mortal remains to the earth in the shrine of Saint Sheikh Ahmed Khattú, under the dome at the foot of the grave of Sultán Mehmúd. And this happened on Friday, the 2nd of the month of Jamád-ul-Awwal, A. H. 932. (A.D. 1525).

The period of his reign was fourteen years and nine months. The Sultán was the spiritual follower of Sháh Táhir, who sleeps the eternal sleep in Baroda. They say, that none of the Sultáns of Gujarát equalled him in piety, and knowledge and understanding. They say that during the days of his dominion he had the honour of seeing the Holy Prophet (on whom be peace!) in a dream, and the Prophet prayed to God to save the Sultán from the fire (of hell). That same night a hundred pious persons had the same dream (as if to attest the truth of the Sultán's dream), and they all came in the morning to the Sultán and related their dreams. Happy, and of fortunate destiny is he, who, in his life enjoys a throne, and in the future is free from the wrath of the Almighty and the tortures of hell! They say that one night the Sultan was sitting in company with some wise and good men and conversation turned on many a topic of tradition and anecdote. In the course of conversation a wise man said, that on the Day of Judgment the Sun would come down as low as the length of a spear to burn the souls of the wicked. On that day those who knew the Kuráán by heart together with seven of their ancestors would be shaded by umbrellas of Divine mercy and the heat of the Sun should be as nought to them, by the grace of the word of God that they would carry within their breasts. The Sultán heaved a heavy sigh and deplored that none of his children had obtained the glory to make him aspire to that mercy! And he set to commit the Kuráán to memory after returning to Baroda, which was his jagír. His hard study night and day harmed his eyes, which became sore and red. His intimate friends now invited his attention to the verse of the Kuraán :—

“ And God does not trouble his servants beyond their capacities.”

They requested him to give his eyes a little more rest for some days. But the Sultán continued in his course, taking pride in his ailment, and in the period of one year and some months he finished the task, and presenting himself before his father at Ahmedábád reported the circumstance to him, calling to mind the incident that gave it rise. The Sultán embraced him and kissed him on the eyes and head, and commenced to bless and praise him. They say that in the month of Ramazán of that year—for sixteen nights, he recited the Kuráán at the night prayers. The Sultán was very thankful and said: “ With what tongue shall I praise and thank the goodness of Khalil Khán, who has freed me and my ancestors on the Day of Resurrection from the fierce heat of its Sun. How can I make a return for it? What I possess is the kingdom. I will give him this, during my lifetime, may it be a blessing to him!" He rose, and seated Khalíl Khán on the throne, and himself sat on another. May God's blessing be on them both, father and son! In the morning he invited all the officials, nobles, and soldiers to a banquet in which such good dishes were prepared that the men of that day said that they had never seen such a feast given by any prince. After the dinner he related the events of the previous night and his giving the kingdom to Khalíl Khán as a reward for his learning the Kuráán. All approved of it, and praised both the king and the prince.

¹ Sale's translation of the Kuráán, Chap : The Children of Imrán.

They say that the Sultán had a horse which was unequalled in his galloping and his pleasant paces, and which was reserved for the Sultán's riding. One day the horse had a colic, and though they gave him a great many remedies they had no effect. An expert said, "If they pour Náb or pure wine down his throat, it would benefit him;" and they did so, and the pain immediately departed. The Master of the Sultan's Horse related the circumstance to the Sultán. The Sultán bit his finger with grief and never after rode that horse.

They say that the Sultán neither as a prince, nor afterwards when he sat on the throne, took anything intoxicating. One day Kiwámul-Mulk said, "Has the Sultán ever taken any intoxicating thing?" He said, "Yes, in the days of my childhood, when I was but five years of age. My foot slipped off the balcony staircase, and I fell to the ground, and received a severe bruise. At that time Hansbái, who was my grand-mother and who had charge of my bringing up, gave me two or three cups of wine to drink. I drank them, but they made me very sick and I was at the point of death. The Bái saw in a dream a person saying to her, 'Have you given Khalíl Khán wine?' She said, 'Yes.' He said, 'Repent and promise never again to put wine to his lip, and he will recover.' Hansbái related that she said, 'I have repented,' and her feet trembled, and she awoke, and asked God for pardon, and I immediately recovered. I remember that I drank wine on that day, after that God has watched over me, and has guarded me from having anything to do—with this impurity."

They say that Sultán Muzaffar rarely used even to mention intoxicating things, and when it was necessary to speak of them, he called them all "pills," and therefore the people of Gujarát, have ever since,—called intoxicating confections—"gohi" or pills.

They say that the Sultán never gave up any good custom, and he always performed the prescribed ablutions, and took care to remain in a condition of ceremonial purity, and always acted up to the traditions and example of the Prophet, on whom be blessings and peace! He always remembered death, and his eyes were ever weeping and his heart 'grieved.' The Sultán took much trouble in serving and showing respect to men of learning, but he did not believe in darvishes, even as much as was necessary for the sake of decent appearance, but he rejected them as the learned object to Súfis or mystics. When the Sultán obtained the honour of knowing Sháh Sheikh Jí, son of Sayad Burhánuddin Bukhári, known as Kutbi Álam, his opinions in this respect underwent an entire change. Afterwards, in whatever place he heard of a darvish, he used to go to see him, and used to obtain what benefit he could from him; and the account of his meeting with that holy person, Sháh Sheikh Jí, I will hereafter relate—if God wills.

It must not be concealed that the wise men of Gujarát relate many miracles performed by the Sultán. This is one of them: Malik-ul-Hadyáh called Hurmuz-ul-mulk who was one of the Sultán's companions had no child, and on account of this was exceedingly vexed and "grieved. He thought of going to the exalted Kaâbah which is the place where all prayers are granted, to beseech Alláh the Granter of all wishes to give him a child. He came, therefore, to the Sultán and wept, and having shown his intention asked for leave. The Sultán felt compassion for him and said, "Malik-ul-Hadyah wait for this year, God will give you a son." The Malik waited. The Sultán left off animal food, spent his nights in prayer, and after the midnight prayers he lifted his hands in supplication before the Maker of the Morn, and begged for a son for Malik-ul-Hadyah. On the Friday night of that week he saw the Prophet in a dream, and besought him for a son for Malik-ul-Hadyah. The Prophet replied, that two sons should be born to Malik-ul-Hadyah, but that he should marry another wife. On hearing this message the Sultán awoke, and became happy, and performed a prayer of two rakats, after fresh ablutions, and selecting a pretty Rájput virgin slave-girl of mature age from his daughter's attendants, he went to the house of Malik-ul-Hadyah, and gave the slave-girl to him saying : " From this maiden you will get two sons, but make a vow." The Malik did so. After some time the girl conceived, and when her days were accomplished a beautiful son was born. The Sultán himself walked to his house and repeated the takbír in the ear of the new-born babe,¹ and rejoiced with the parents, and after a week named him Lutfulláh. Sayad Muhammad, son of Sayad Jalál, says that he had seen that boy, and during the reign of Ahmed II., he was granted the title of Huzabrul-Mulk, and this miracle of the Sultán was well-known. After some time this slave-girl had another son who also eventually received a title. It is related by respectable people that the Sultán had a great regard and love for the Prophet, on whom be God's blessings and peace! He prayed much for blessings on him, and during the days of the Prophet's nativity he used to order food in his name, and feast the learned men. On these occasions he collected the wise men and the Sayads together, and himself served them, and after their finishing their dinner poured water on their hands, and at bidding them farewell on the 12th day of the nativity month he used to present each of them with cash and clothes sufficient for a year.

¹ In obedience to the Kuránic ordinance: "And laugh ye little and weep ye more." Sale's Translation of the Kurán, Chap. IX. The Declaration of Immunity.

They say that one day, while reading the Holy Kuráán, the Sultán came to the verse about resurrection, and he could not restrain his tears. He said, " On that day what will be my fate?" Mián-Sheikhji, who was his companion, said he thought the Sultán was never guilty of great sins,² and was generally occupied in devotion and prayer and that the people were pleased and thankful for his rule. On that day too the Sultán's honour would be great. But the Sultán said, " Sheikhji, on my shoulders there is a great load ; and my weeping and lamentations are on that account. Have you not heard the tradition of the Prophet, (on whom be peace !) 'Those bearing light weights of sin shall be saved, and the bearers of heavy loads shall be destroyed.'"

Sayad Jalál Munawwar-ul-Mulk says that when he was four years of age, his father Sayad Muhammad was slain in battle. On the third

¹ That the first mundane sound to reach the ears of a new-born infant should be the name of his Creator, Islám ordains—that the most honoured of a child's male relatives should repeat the takbír (the call to prayers) in both his ears.

² Sins are of two classes, صغیر small and كبير great. The first consist of acts of common peccancy which no mortal born of woman can avoid; the second include from crimes and delinquencies to the breaking of the commandment—"thou shalt not lie."

day Malik Asadul-mulk who was called Sheikhji Tamīm, and who was one of the chief nobles of the Sultán, took him before the Sultán, and related the fate of his father to the king. The king directed him to approach and patted his head and face with his hands and said, "This boy will be very rich." From that day for ten years he says he remained in the Sultán's service, but never saw in all that time the Sultán scolding or behaving disrespectfully to any one. This the Sultán carried to such an extent that although he entertained a bad opinion of Kiwámul-mulk Sárang, and did not find in him the sincere regard a servant feels for his master, yet as he was a companion of his father Sultán Mehmuíd who placed entire confidence in him after the death of Sultán Mehmuíd, Sultán Muzaffar continued him, in the office of water-keeper (ábdár). From his exceeding goodness of heart Sultán Muzaffar did not transfer him from this important post though he was ever so suspicious of him that when Kiwámul-mulk, of Ramazán evenings, used to bring water to drink at the time of breaking the fast, the Sultán used to take the water from his hand, but before drinking it, to repeat certain verses of the Kuráán¹ as charms to avert the effects of the poison, he used always to suspect in the cup. At length the above-mentioned Malik became acquainted with the Sultán's mind, and said, "This slave has become old, and is unable to perform his duty of ábdári." The Sultán said, "Who, besides you, will be able to perform this duty?" He said, "My nephew, who in the days you were a prince, was appointed your wine-bearer or water-bearer. He is fit for the service, so let your old slave be free." The Sultán acted accordingly. During his whole life he never disgraced any of Alláh's creatures nor did he ever speak to any one contemptuously, but addressed every one with respect, nor was any one ever vexed with the Sultán. He used often to say, "If I were alone in the jungle, no one would harm me, because I have not injured, nor do I injure any one."

It is said that the Sultán was bathing one day before morning prayer, and the bath servants were pouring water on him. The king after washing his body asked for water, to pour on his head. By chance in the darkness of the night a rat had, through the neglect of the bath-servants, fallen into the vessel of warm water, and had been boiled therein. Its flesh, bones, and entrails had through the action of the heat become scattered in the water. The bath servants, ignorant of this, filled a small water-vessel from that large one and gave it to the Sultán, and the Sultán poured that water on his head, and all the entrails and flesh fell on his face and side. The Sultán horrified at this, leapt from the spot, and jumped in to the bathing tank, and cleaned his head, face, and side in it, and issuing, commenced to pray. After prayers he sent for the áftáb-chís or bath-servants. The bath servants having washed their hands of their lives approached. He asked, "How many of you are appointed on this service?" They said, "One hundred men." "Cannot one hundred men," continued the Sultán, "discharge the service of one person and serve him decently? I am old and forgive your fault, but my sons are young, and if you act towards my sons with such laziness and carelessness, how will you live in safety? Oh, unfortunate men! after this, do not again be careless and waste not my time in obliging me to speak to you again in a similar manner." How excellent are the words:

¹ Chap. CVI. ending with the word, "the Lord of this House (the Kaábah) who supplieth them with food and secureth them from fear," is believed to possess this

VERSES.

He is not a hero who in wrestling
 Dashes down another hero.
 But rather is he a hero who in a moment of anger
 Subdues the cravings of his tempting heart.

And the words of the Sultán were prophetic. For in the time of Sultán Bahádur one of these very áftáb-chís poured boiling hot water on the hand of the Sultán. The Sultán ordered that boiling water should be poured on his testes that he might be a warning to others. They say that they poured boiling water on his privy parts and that they burst and he died immediately.

Sayad Jalál Bukhári relates that the Sultán used to write daily a chapter of the Kuráán in the Naskh character, and when the whole Kuráán was finished, he used to bestow it as a waqf or deodand to the Holy Makkah or Madinah that whosoever might desire to read it, might do so. One day he was occupied in writing, and wrote one page very well, and became very pleased, and said, "I have written that page very well;" he wished that he might turn over the leaf. At this moment Latíful-mulk Sondha, the bearer of the royal insignia,* who was standing behind him with his drawn sword, began to nod under the waning intoxication of his opium. The sword dropped from his hand, and fell on the Sultán's shoulder, the pen fell from the Sultán's hand, and blackened several lines of the page. The attendants pushed the man away from the Sultán's presence. The Sultán did not say a word, but taking a pen-knife erased the ink which had fallen on the page and having rubbed in some chalk-powder he rubbed and glazed it over again and commenced to write. When he had finished the chapter, and replaced it in the writing-desk, he said, "Where is that fool Latiful-mulk?" Sheikh Jí said by way of intercession for him, "My Lord, he has thrown himself on the ground outside, and is weeping bitterly, and is saying that he has committed a great fault, and deserves that his head should be cut off or that he should be thrown under the feet of an elephant." The Sultán replied: "Why should I cut off his head, though, if he commits such careless acts again, his hands shall be cut off, but tell him that he should never again appear before me." Malik Sheikh Jí then said: "This is worse than cutting off his head. What place is there for him in the world after that to go to?" "Miyán Sheikh Jí," said the Sultán, "tell him then not to eat another pill" (meaning opium), "nor approach any thing intoxicating." Malik Sheikh Jí said, "Your Majesty, he will not do so, he is repenting." The end of the affair was that Malik Sheikh Jí sent for him and made him throw himself at the Sultán's feet. The Sultán forgave him, and he, taking his sword, stood again behind the Sultán as before. How excellent are the lines:—

To punish evil with evil is easy

If you are a man act well towards those who do you ill!

Sayad Jalál Bukhári relates that there was a bath-servant, a boy who was very clever and quick. Whenever the Sultán asked him a question, he used to give an apt answer, at which the Sultán used to be pleased and to smile. One day the Sultán was occupied in his ablutions, and this pert boy was pouring the water. It was the custom of the Sultán that when performing his ablutions, one of the servants used to lift up the turban from the Sultán's head, and the Sultán used to wet the crown of his head, and the servant used to replace the turban. After the ablutions were performed, he used to place his hand on his turban, and having unrolled and untwisted the end to the length of two or three turns, used to wind it up again. One day while thus engaged one of the attendants said, "Your Majesty, how beautiful is the texture of the cloth of this turban?" The Sultán said, "It is not so very excellent, my servants wear even better than this, but they do not bind it up in my style, but wind it with a twist." The boy then said "It does not look well unless it is done with a twist." The Sultán said, "Does then my way of binding the turban appear bad?" The boy said, "The style of the Sultán's turban is like that of Mulláhs and Bohráhs." Asadul-mulk gave the boy a slap on his cheek, and reproved him. The Sultán said, "Why do you strike him. He is but a child, he says what he hears from his parents. I am pleased that my turban should be compared with the turbans of Mulláhs. But why do they compare it, with the turban of Bohráhs who are Ráfzis,¹ while I am a Sunni and ask protection of God from them."

They say that a wine-seller once gave the Sultán a petition. An iron ring being on his hand, caught in the Sultán's sleeve and tore it. The Sultán opened the letter, and read it, and understood its purport, but he made an order that in future people wishing to petition should not give their petitions into his hand, but should tie it on the end of a stick, and so present it to him or his attendants who would take it from them, and give it to him."

Let it be known that the Sultán, who had the distinction of being a man of learning who acted upon his precepts, did not practise extravagance, whence those who cherished hopes without right, considered him to be a miser, and in meetings and assemblies used to decry him. This their opinion of the Sultán was the result of the excess of their avarice, not the Sultán's worldliness of nature. Had the Sultán been a world-lover, he would never have handed over to Sultán Mehmúd Khilji a country like Málwá and its treasures as well as the booty he had acquired from Medáni Rái with so much trouble, as has been abovementioned. Although other Sultáns of Gujarát gave away much gold like Sultán Muhammad bin Ahmed Sháh and like Sultán Muzaffar's son Sultán Bahádur, yet there is a great difference between the bestowing of gold and the bestowing of a kingdom. With money Sultán Muzaffar also was generous where there was need, but within bounds. It is said that Hujjatul-Mulk, the eunuch who, in the time of Sultán Bahádur Sháh, was ennobled by the title of Khán Jahán, was in the time of Sultán Muzaffar entrusted with the Police Magistracy over the city of Ahmedábád and he lived to a great age. They say that in police work he was unequalled. He could tell a thief from his face. It is said that one day he was walking in the bazár, and saw a man sitting there. He stopped and said to Jívan, the nose-cut executioner, to seize the man. Men wondered thinking "this man has done no wrong, why does he arrest him without reason?" When they seized, and brought him, and commenced to search his head-dress and waist-clothes, the keys of the hobbles usually put on the feet of Government horses dropped from his turban. It appeared that he was the leader of a band of thieves. At another time it struck Khán Jahàn in the course of his duties that four generations of the Gujarát kings had passed, and the allowances to religious persons stood as before, without change or alteration. Each king in his time had granted fresh grants; he would, therefore, find out who of the grantees had died, who had gone away, and who were enjoying the grants. After enquiry and search he found that most of the original grantees were dead, and there was not a single instance of any of them having gone away or left the country. This last was owing to the country of Gujarát being in those times full of gold, and there was so much ease and comfort to be had in it that strangers who entered it never left it, and the natives of Gujarát would never think of leaving it for another place. In short the jáyirs of the dead grantees were resumed, and Hujjat-ul-Mulk having realized the arrears on others brought them in gold to the Sultán. The Sultán said, "What and whose is this money?" He said: "It is the Sultán's and the reason of its acquisition is that from the time of Sultán Muzaffar I. (may God have mercy on him!) these properties have been granted to religious persons, and thence till now their incomes have gone on increasing. When I made inquiry, I found that very many of the grantees were dead, so I collected the incomes of their properties and have brought them to the Sultán." The Sultán reproached him, and commenced to revile him, saying: "O fool, what shall I say to you? If you were a man, I would have reviled you by calling you a coward; if you were a woman, I would have called you unchaste. You are neither man nor woman, but the bad qualities of both are present in you. They who are dead, their sons must be alive, if no son yet a daughter, and if there be also no daughter, there must surely be a wife and slave-girls. If you have done this act of yourself, you have done ill. Do not again do such an act. Begone and return this gold to those from whom you have taken it and heal the broken hearts of those poor people with the ointment of apologies and excuses." After this he made an order, that an order should be issued to all the grantees of land on religious tenures in Gujarát to the effect that the jágirs of the deceased persons should be divided among their heirs according to the divinely ordained shares and that no person should be able to meddle with them now or in the future.

¹ Ráfzi is an opprobrious term for 'Shíáh,' meaning literally one who abandons, a heretic, just as the Roman Catholics used to style their Lutheran co-religionists.

From that day the estates of deceased grantees have been divided according to the Divine ordinance, viz. :— “And for the male there shall be a share equal to that of two females.”

It is related that when Sultán Mehmúd Khilji of Málwá made an expedition to conquer Gujarát, of which mention has been made above and when he reached the frontier of Gujarát, several clerks who had been turned out by the Gujarát Sultán, went over to and met Sultán Mehmúd Khilji, and showed him the revenue papers of Gujarát. The Sultán listened to the details one after another. Men said, “It is a good omen that the revenue records of Gujarát have fallen into our hands. It means that the country of Gujarát will also fall into our hands.” Sultán Mehmúd said, “In this country much land is held on religious tenures. There is no district neither village in which there are not lands endowed on religious institutions or as pensions to religious men or officers, and this constitutes an army without horses and riders that like the stars is ever wakeful.” Pensions were appointed for the poor at the sacred cities of Makkah and Madínah, which used to be sent to them annually without let or hindrance. A vessel was appointed to convey poor pilgrims thither without charge, the expenses of their trip to and from the holy cities being borne by Government.

The expenses of Sultán Muzaffar's private establishment were not extravagant, but in charity he was liberal. A great man has said: “Extravagance in expenses means niggardliness in good acts.” Generosity opens the gates of high estate in the world to come and in this world brings a tenfold return. But it is not meet to patronise venal praise or to go in for the howlings of singers, acts which according to the sacred verse are sure to bring penury in this world and damnation in the next.

The Sultán was unequalled in soldierly accomplishments, and in swordsmanship had attained to such skill that he used to lift up an animal killed according to the order of the law, with his left hand and with one blow of the sword held in his right used to cleave its body intwain. With the spear he was such an adept that he used to carry off a ring on the point of his spear. It is related that the Sultán to learn the true condition of the poor among his subjects, and to acquaint himself with their wants and opinions used to issue out of dark nights, and learning their grievances used to call them in the morning to do them justice, after listening to their complaint and wants in streets and market places during the night. It is said that one night he went into a mosque and found a sufferer crying in a corner. He asked of him the reason, but the man said, "Why do you ask, the reason is better unsaid." But the Sultán said, "Do say, perhaps the evil can be remedied." He said, "I am a poor man and a disappointed. Every night a rascal enters my house, and I can't prevent him. I am weary and wretched. To whom can I take this tale of mine and of whom ask its remedy?" The Sultán asked, "When does he come?" The man said, "Every night." The Sultán asked him to be of good cheer, for, said he, he vowed to consider food as forbidden and unlawful until he killed him. So saying, he asked the man to show the adulterer to him, and he followed the man to his house. It so happened, that the evil-doer did not come that night, nor the next, and on the third night the man came and occupied the same corner in the mosque weeping, and apprehensive, lest after his disappointment of the two fore-going nights, his champion should not come that night. In this condition the Sultán found him, and asking him, the man said his culprit had come that night. The Sultán asked him to lead the way and show. While on the way he asked him whether he wished the pair of the guilty ones to be killed or only the adulterer. The man said only the adulterer. On entering the man's house, the Sultán saw the rascal sitting with the poor man's wife. He called out to him to beware and receive the reward of his deeds. The man took up his sword and confronted the Sultán, and struck the first blow which was warded off by the Sultán, and such a blow dealt out in return that the man fell divided in two pieces and dead. The Sultán also sat down, as he had not eaten food since he had sworn the oath. He asked the owner of the house if he had any food in his house. He said he had a piece of bájrí bread. He asked him to bring it, and ate of it and got up to go, when the victim told him, "To-morrow when the Kotewál hears of this he will confiscate my house and imprison me." The Sultán assured him saying, "That also I can remedy." He went to the palace and sent for the Kotewál and gave him the description of the house, and asked him to go there in such a way that the neighbours may not come to know to take the body of the man lying there and to bury it in the house and never to breathe to a man anything of it.

He was also a very skilful archer. It is related that while in Sorath, he went a-hunting and in pursuit of a deer he separated from his attendants and fell in with a band of dacoits. He attacked them with arrows and wounded several of them, while others flying escaped with difficulty. At this time his soldiers also, coming after him, reached him, and saw several Rajputs lying wounded by arrows, and the Sultán standing over them. They all alighted and kissed the hands and feet of the Sultán and praised his courage.

In wrestling the Sultán surpassed the teachers of this art. In all manner of shooting he was very clever and he was also accomplished in learning. In short he was so quick in learning anything new that when he once saw any art he became as if it were an old hand at it.

In conversation, wit and repartee, no one could approach him. He had a companion called Mulla Aiyúb, who was a scholar of respectable parts and a poet of elegance. He used to eat opium, and had written some lines in praise of that drug :

Eat oh ! Sir, an atom of opium,
That it may help thee in not giving way soon in copulation.
Opium befits the learned,
A learned man should act on his learning.¹

Somebody carried this to the Sultán who smiled and said, "The Mulla has not written this to incite people to eat opium but to enlarge on its evil qualities. In truth the placing of ب (in بخور—) instead of م (مخور—) is a clerical error." The change, making the meaning of the word a negation instead of an imperative, i.e., "Do not eat" instead of "Do eat."

It is related that one day a man looking like a scholar came into the Sultán's assembly with the salutation "Peace be upon you!" pronounced Assalámun alaikum,² —السلام عليكم

¹ The beauty of the lines consists in the play upon the words ʿamal and ʿilm and ʿamal. ʿamal has two meanings, practice or acting upon and an intoxicant. So the last line means both as translated above and : "Knowledge must be with an intoxicant" or "No knowledge without an intoxicant."

² After the article 'al' the Arabic Grammar forbids the 'nunnation' of the last syllable. Had the man dropped the article and said, al-salam alaikum it would have been correct. Whereas with the article it would mean something like :—"a, the salám (peace) be on you!"

instead of assalámo áláikum (which is correct). The Sultán replied at once:—

عليكم السلام يا جامع الفنون واللام

“And peace be on you, oh! joiner of the nunnation with the ‘lám.,’”

Again the Sultán was a great critic and connoisseur of music, and had an extremely pleasant voice. He could play on any instrument, be it the harp or the tambourine, or the lute, or the Jew's harp. Masters of this art used to boast being pupils of the Sultán. He was himself a composer in all branches of music, in ‘Suramba’ and ‘Dhya,’ and ‘Náldhya’ and ‘Barágít’ and ‘Sawardáli’ and ‘Chhand’ and ‘Dohra.’ They say in his youth he said to some masters of this art who were assembled before him, “Is there any dancing girl in the present day who could act the part of Sarasvati? ”² Now it is written in the books of the Hindus that a poetess of pleasant voice and unique sweetness of accent and modulation of voice, who is at the same time perfect as a performer of all sorts of instrumental music and an accomplished dancer could only be made by the favor of Sarasvati, and the personification of the part of Sarasvati could be undertaken by such a one alone who is accomplished in all these arts and who can, besides, equal the goddess in perfection of beauty and loveliness. The great musicians replied, “Peace be on the king, the personification of Sarasvati is extremely difficult. No one except Bái Champa, dancer of the Sultán, can take this part, for she is the peerless of her age in these arts.” The Sultán ordered that preparations for the performance be made. They said every thing was ready except the swan, which (according to Hindu mythology) is the bird on which Sarasvati is said to ride. The King ordered all the goldsmiths of the city to be present and to be given the jewels they required. In six months they made it ready. The Sultán came and sat in the assembly and Bái Champa having dressed herself up as Sarasvati came in. On arriving she began to repeat poetry composed extemporely, separating line from line and then taking up the instruments, she played so that the professors of the art forgot the real Sarasvati. Then she began to sing and made those present in the assembly quite wild and entranced. Then she danced in the way in which that art should be practised, till the people present began to say that since the world began no body had acted so well.

¹ All these are the names of Indian rhythmic measures and musical modes.

² The Minerva of the Hindu Pantheon.

Historians have said that Sultán Muzaffar was so very humble and gentle that those who could be kept down with severity did not mind his authority and used to commit highway robberies and thefts with impunity. The roads were dangerous up to very near the city of Ahmedábád and rascals were fearless in sowing seeds of bloodshed in the midst of the city—just as some wise men have said :

VERSE.

If the king has no severity,
He takes an excuse from the hands of the audacious.
When the lion sheels his teeth and claws
He gets slaps even from cats and lame foxes.

The administrative powers were in the hands of Kiwámul-mulk Sárang and Malik Gobi or Gopi—the Brahmin. They were not influenced by the Sultán's orders, and they did what they liked whether the King was pleased or not. The Sultán never drew the hand of punishment from the sleeve of forbearance. Nor did he ever unsheath the dagger of wrath, and when he heard the complaints of the people he used to say : "I pray to God and you also beseech God that he may remove the oppression of the oppressor." The reason of this patience was that when Sultán Mehmúd (may God enlighten his fame!) departed this world, the nobles were divided as to who should succeed to the throne. Some said, "Khalil Khán, that is to say Sultán Muzaffar, is like a priest (mullah) in disposition, has not the dignity befitting the kingly state, and the entrusting of this important matter to his son Bahádur Khán would be better. From Bahádur Khán's forehead the light of royalty is reflected. Others took the side of Khalil Khán and wished to enthrone him. Among these were Kiwámul-mulk Sárang and Gobi or Gopi who said, "When the late Sultán seated Khalil Khán on the throne in his life-time, we should not act in opposition to his wishes." All agreeing to this, they seated Khalil Khán on the throne. Some say that this loyalty of theirs was the cause of his overlooking their faults until by their instigation the Rána attacked Nizám-ul-mulk as has been related above. Although the Sultán was aware of it, he forgave them, nor did he entirely turn away from them. His well-wishers said, "Slay him who desires ill to the State, for the death of such a graceless one is lawful." Just about this time a new event happened. Malik Gopi was a man of pleasure. They say that on the night of a banquet and dance at his house they used to take all the flowers of the gardens and the markets to his Durbár, and if any one that night wanted flowers, they could not be obtained. He had a celebrated and very pretty dancing-girl, called Dhár. A young man named Ahmed Khán, of the tribe of Tánk, a kinsman of the Sultán, without seeing her, simply from hearing accounts of her famed beauty, became enamoured of her. On one of the nights of her performances, having made an agreement with and disguised himself as a torch-bearer, he took a torch in his hand, and entered the place where she was performing. Although he was disguised as a torch-bearer, his countenance was recognized and the servants of the house seized him and kicked him nearly to death. When Malik Gopi saw that but little life was left in him, though knowing what was going on, he feigned ignorance and commenced to reprove his men and to make excuses to Ahmed Khán saying : " I was not aware of this. If you wished to see the dance, why did you not inform me. I should have invited you and shown you the performance." He sent for his palanquin, and placed him in it, and sent him to his house. Next day Ahmed Khán died from the severity of the beating he had received that night and this circumstance reached the Sultán. The Sultán became very angry, and the relations of Ahmed Khán demanded blood revenge. The Sultán secretly gave them leave to take it. One night Malik Gopi was going to his house from the Sultán's Durbár, and they stopped him on the way and after inflicting on him several grievous wounds fled, but no wound was mortal. In the morning the eunuch Muhibbul-Mulk related to the Sultán what had taken place the previous night, and said that of the Malik's wounds none was mortal. Kiwámul-mulk said, " Malik Gopi the Brahman is a well-wisher of the king. The wounds of a well-wisher will never hurt him." The Sultán did not listen to him, but thought it not well to spare a wounded snake, and next day ordered an attack to be made on his house, that is, gave the people permission to plunder it. People ran and in the twinkling of the eye like a scramble at a wedding, they plundered his house and property, and having tied Malik Gopi's hands behind his back they brought him to the presence of the Sultán. It is at such times that the truth of the proverb:¹ " God spare us from the wrath of the gentle," is illustrated. The Sultán ordered him to be slain. Gopi said, " I am a Brahman, and was a beggar. I had arrived at this rank through your father's favour. Whatever I received from Government has been plundered from me and of all my possessions two were very precious. Had they been brought to the Sultán's Darbár, I should not have grieved. One was a slave-girl of great beauty, the equal of whom exists not, and the other were certain precious stones to be found in the treasuries of kings. Both are gone, and have been plundered from me." The Sultán repeated a couplet to the effect that, what comes lightly goes lightly. After this he said, "How much annoyance has been experienced by Musalmáns through this unbeliever. Slay him." The people were pleased at this order, and slew the unhappy man like a dog.¹

¹ A tradition of the Prophet (on whom be peace!) which has become proverbial.

ACCOUNT OF THE SELF-MORTIFICATION AND DEVOTION OF THE LORD
SHÁH SHEIKHJI IN RESPECT OF BAHÁDUR KHÁN AND ITS RESULT.

It is related by the respectable people of Gujarát that when Sultán Mehínúd passed away from this transitory world to the everlasting one and Sultán Muzaffar ascended the throne, some of the faithful followers of his Holiness Hazrat Sháh Sheikhji represented to him, that the late khalífah² was dead, and the new khalífah had succeeded him. If the Saint went to pray for the departed and congratulate the living it would be but an act of kind courtesy. His Holiness said, "Our last meeting with his (meaning the king's) father was not good and this king is a youth and is besides a dry scholar, a kind of man who generally has neither any regard nor love for men of sanctity nor much belief in them. Therefore not to go is better." The followers then said that the kingdom of Gujarát was entrusted to the ancestors of the Sultán by his exalted house, and if he showed this courtesy it would be but acting on established precedent. That if his father did not appreciate this blessing, the present Sultán was wise and learned and knew these things. At last under pressure of their endeavours and entreaties the Saint went to Chámpáner. Most of the ministers and nobles being his spiritual followers went forth to receive him and brought him to the Sultán's residence and seated him near the royal apartments. The chamberlains ran and announced to the ¹ Here an anecdote descriptive of the knowledge of the Sultán as shown in the decision by him of a nice point of Muslim theology is omitted.

² A khalífah means literally a deputy, and is applied to a temporal ruler too on the principle of the first four rulers of Islám being so called on account of being the deputies of the Prophet.

Sultán the arrival of the Saint. The Sultán who was not aware of the Saint being in such close proximity said, "He pronounced against my father such a blighting curse, I wonder what he brings for me." These words having come plainly and directly to the ears of His Holiness he was hurt and got up and at once turned homewards without obtaining an interview with the Sultán. After some days the Sultán went to Ahmedábád. When on his way thither he reached the shrine of the Saint Kutbi Álam at Batwá he did not, as was the wont of the Sultáns of Gujarát, dismount to say his prayers at the grave of the Saint, but simply repeated his Fátihah (the first chapter of the Kuráún) on horseback and pushed on, on his way to the city. The Saint also did not care for the Sultán. After some days the Sultán fell sick, about the time of the anniversary of the death of Saint Kutbi Álam. He ordered the royal kitchen to be taken to Sarkhej on the night of the anniversary, and there to prepare food to feed the poor for the good of the soul of the departed Saint. He said he would himself follow the next morning. They did so. That night Saint Kutbi Álam appeared to the Sultán in a dream and said:—"Muzaffar Khán! why don't you come to my house?" The Sultán asked, "Where is your noble house?" The Saint said, "At Batwá, the house of Sheikhji; he who goes to Sheikhá's house goes to mine, and he who gladdens Sheikhá's heart gladdens mine. Go, therefore, to my house and the ailment that thou hast shall be changed into health." In the morning when the Sultán got up he ordered his palanquin and started for Batwá. That same night Kutbi Álam appeared to Sheikhji in a dream and informed him that Muzaffar Khán was coming to his house and that he was to receive him with kindness and place his hand on his head and back, so that Heaven may bless him with good health. In the morning, before the arrival of the Sultán, the Sheikhji told his companions that last night Saint Kutbi Álam had brought about a reconciliation between himself and the Sultán who was coming that day, and ordered the servants of his kitchen to cook the best of viands, and ordered that from each house in that town, he who was the best cook should come to his kitchen and cook the dish for which he was famous. After a few hours the Sultán arrived at Ásaspur, and sent a man to say that he was coming, and to ask the Saint to get some food ready for him as he was very hungry. The Sultán followed the man shortly. When he reached near the shrine of Kutbi Álam, he descended from the palanquin at some distance from the shrine, and walked on foot as far as the shrine and performing the ceremonies of prayers for the departed, he shook hands with His Holiness and the two great men smiled at each other. The Saint said: "As your Majesty was ordered to call on this darvish, he also is in like manner ordered to meet you." The Sultán threw himself at the feet of the Saint, who having placed his hand on the head and back of the Sultán, took him into his arms, and afterwards took him to his own residence, and there the Saint, who was accomplished in secrets of religion and belief so expatiated on matters religious and divine before the Sultán, that he and all present went into an ecstasy and were beyond themselves.

VERSES.

The sure signs of a saint are these :
 That no sooner you see his face than your heart yearns towards him.
 The second is that his words lead you to ecstasy
 And from the world of consciousness to that of pure unconsciousness.

After a while the Sheikh got up, went to his inner apartments, and sent out dinner for the Sultán. The Sultán, however, asked the Sheikh to join him at the table. At first the Sheikh asked to be excused saying he had a cough, but on being pressed by the Sultán he came out and they sat together and partook of the food. The Sultán ever and anon used to praise the delicious viands according to the Kuránic command: "And verily speak of the bounties of thy Lord." They then said their prayers together. The next morning the Sultán got up and said his prayers in the following of the Sheikh. After prayers they sat and the Sultán said to the Saint: "For some time past I was ailing and was losing my memory, but since yesterday I feel a comfort and a lightness, which makes me hope that the little that remains will also soon disappear." The Saint prayed for him and bade him adieu. On his way to Ahmedábád the Sultán told his companions: "Had I not seen the Saint I would have remained ignorant of the Knowledge of God." From that day the Sultán was a staunch believer in Saints and darvishes; and through their society obtained true knowledge. Allah be praised for that!

ACCOUNT OF THE REQUEST OF SULTÁN MUZAFFAR TO THE SAINT SHEIKHJI FOR THE THRONE OF GUJARÁT FOR HIS SON SIKANDAR KHÁN.

Sultán Muzaffar had eight sons. The eldest was Sikandar Khán, the second was Bahádur Khán, and Latif Khán, and Chánd Khán, and Nasir Khán, and others, and two daughters, one Rájé Rukaiyah whom he married to Ádil Sháh Burhánpuri, and Rájé Áyeshah who was married to Fateh Khán, son of the Pádsháh of Sindh.

Sikandar Khán, Rájé Rukaiyah, and Rájé Áyeshah were all from one mother whose name was Bíbi Ráni. The mother of Bahádur Khán was Lakshmi Báí, a Gohel Rájputáni, and the mother of Latíf Khán was Rájbái, the daughter of Ráná Mahipat who was a Rajput, and Chánd Khán, Nasir Khán, Ibráhím Khán, and two others were the sons of slave-girls. The authority over the palace and country and army was all in the hands of Bíbi Ráni, and 7,000 men drew pay from her establishment. The Sultán during his life-time had appointed Sikandar Khán his successor, and he placed no confidence in his other sons. He granted to each of them two or three villages that they should expend from their revenues what was necessary for their subsistence, and among these, two were granted in jágír to Bahádur Khán. These were the villages of Kaníj, ten kos from Ahmedábád, near Mehmudábád, and Gonah, ten kos from the above city near Tantah, near Batwá, which had been granted as estate to the offspring of Kutbul Aktáb. On this account Bahádur Sháh used chiefly to live at Batwá, and was included among the devotees of that holy man, and the Hazrat also was very fond of Bahádur Khán, and showed him much kindness.

It is stated that in the patent of discipleship granted to Bahádur Khán, the Hazrat wrote with his own pen "Sultán Bahádur." Some say that he wrote "Sultán Bahádur king of Gujarát." Besides this, one day he seated Bahádur Khán on his own couch and said to the people who were present, "In the end this is the king of Gujarát." All of them performed to him the kingly salutation and reverence. This circumstance became public, and went to the ears of Bíbi Ráni, who became disturbed, and thoughtful, and related the matter to Sultán Muzaffar and said, "Take Sikandar Khán also to meet the Hazrat and tell him you have made him your heir, and the Hazrat will then according to your desire bless Sikandar Khán, and be on his side." The king said, "Bahádur Khán has a jágír in Batwá and therefore is constantly there, and is constantly serving him, and these saints always bless those who go to them. Be satisfied since I have in my life-time made Sikandar Khán my heir, and the army and people all incline towards him, how will Bahádur arrive at the kingly state. The Hazrat is also aware of this and in the meaning I will go to him, and explain my intentions, and seek a blessing from him for Sikandar Khán."

The B́ibi brought large presents to the Sultán, and begged him to take them to the Saint that he might aid and bless Sikandar Khán. In the morning the Sultán, with all his children, went to attend on the Saint. He then first made Sikandar Khán, and then all the others in order his disciples. At this moment Bahádur Khán came, and having made a salutation, sat between the Sultán and Sikandar Khán. The king who was deep in conversation with the Saint did not notice his arrival and when the time to recommend Sikandar Khán arrived, said : " Your holiness knows that Sikandar Khán is the eldest of my sons, and is in every way decent and able, and I have made him my heir apparent." Saying this he stretched out his hand, and took the hand of Bahádur Khán, thinking it was the hand of Sikandar Khán, and said, " Your holiness will bless him that God may after me bestow the kingdom of Gujarát on him." The Sayad said, " Your prayer has been accepted by the Lord of the Kingdom, and He will vouchsafe the kingdom of Gujarát to him, and he will conquer another country besides Gujarát." The Sultán looked joyfully towards Sikandar Khán, and saw the hand of Bahádur Khán in his hand. He was sore troubled and astonished. The Sayad said, " Your desire shall be accomplished." The people of the assembly, who were men of sagacity and penetration, understood that the ball of fortune and victory had been carried away by Bahádur Khán, and that Sikandar Khán was not blessed with this good fortune. " To each one his fate." After this the Sultán took leave, and on the road he said to his companions, " Did you see what a shameless act this little beggar¹," (meaning Bahádur Sháh), " committed. He came and sat above his elder brother." He said to Sikandar Khán, " Why did you let him sit above you." Sikandar Khán said nothing. Next day the Sultán collected all his nobles and ministers in a general darbár and said, " Know all of you and be beware that my successor is Sultán Sikandar Khán and it is incumbent and imperative on all of you to obey him." All willingly assented and paid him homage, and B́ibi Ráni and Sikandar Khán were satisfied. But they were forgetful of the will of God, and they were not aware of the decrees of fate ; they also did not know for the fruition of whose desires the skies would eventually revolve and to whose wishes the times would accord.

¹ The word used in the text is Kalandarah, a little calender or calender kin, a word of contempt for a darutsh. It is not inappropriately used for Bahádur, seeing that he used in those days to affect the society of darutshes.

In short, after this the soldiery and the subjects became confident that none other than Sikandar Khán would be, and was the successor of the Sultán. Though previously too they had hardly been doubtful, this became fixed and certain and every one began to place the saddle-cloth of submission to Sikandar Khán on his shoulders and to water the tree of hope from the fountain of his munificence. Sikandar Khán became jealous of his brother, and desirous of striking at the root of Bahádur Khán. Bahádur Khán fled to the shelter of the Saint, became hopeless of the protection of his father, and took up his residence in Batwá, and considering his good fortune in both the worlds to lie in the service of his spiritual guide and mentor, he remained in his society. The Saint also showed kindness to him and regarded him with special favour, but now and then Bahádur Khán used to break out in freaks of boyish thoughtlessness and youthful folly to the great annoyance of the people of Batwá. He sometimes used to knock off a man's turban, and at others to set his Georgian dogs at some poor wretch. The Saint had a door-keeper named Kúbil, a Kokani, who used to break wind frequently. Bahádur Khán used to play tricks on him and afterwards used to conciliate him again by giving him presents, sweetmeats, and food. Once he directed his servants to undo the strings of the old man's drawers and tie up his hands and tie a string at the ends of his trousers and put a little bat inside them. On this being done, the terrified creature clawed his legs and hinder parts and tore his skin and blood flowed from the wounds, and in this state he went to the Saint and complained. Some of those present who aggrieved and offended with Bahádur bore a grudge against him said, "Bahádur Shah is constantly doing unbecoming things like this. He knocked off a man's turban the other day, and set his dogs at another man ; if he had not run, and taken shelter in the house, they would have torn his legs to pieces." The Saint became very angry and said, "The eaters of squirrels, that is, Firangi dogs, will tear him also to pieces, and his ruin will come from these dog-like people." Bahádur Khán on hearing of this repented, and at the intercession of some of the great friends of the Saint again presented himself before him. In the end Sultán Bahádur was slain by the Firangis (or Portuguese), and his honour was changed to dishonour. It is curious that some learned men found the date of his death to be contained in the words, "Katili Kilábi Firang," slaughtered by or the victim of Firangi dogs. Others find the date in the words, "Katli Bahádur Khán akbar-i-shahid-ul-bahr." The killing of Bahádur Khán, the great martyr at sea. These details will be hereafter related in the account of Sultán Bahádur—if God wills.

ACCOUNT OF THE DEPARTURE OF BAHÁDUR KHÁN FROM GUJARÁT TO HINDUSTAN ON ACCOUNT OF THE ENMITY OF SIKANDAR KHÁN.

It is said that on hearing the favourable prophecy of the Saint Sheikh Jí regarding the future greatness of Bahádur Khán, Sikandar Khán from envy and hatred, determined to slay him. Bahádur Khán understanding this, arranged with his trusted servants and partisans, and determined to flee. He explained the circumstances to the Saint, his protector, saying that when the Sultán his father also heard of the designs of Sikandar Khán he had said, "I am now grown old on account of this care, and physicians cannot cure my malady. 'Alláh's earth is wide,' why narrow it upon yourself, and not withdraw into some corner. On account of this I desire to go to Delhi, if your holiness give me leave." The Saint said :—

"Let your heart repose in God, for He is the strongest of the strong,
If your enemy is powerful your Guardian is yet more powerful."

The order for the kingdom of Gujarát has been confirmed in your name from the Darbár of the King of Kings ; only its time has not yet come. Until then let your travelling kit be loaded. Travel is lucky for you." At that moment Bahádur Khán made a mental vow to bestow the estate he enjoyed as a prince on the fakirs of the Saint Kutb-ul-aktáb if God ever made it his destiny to rule over the kingdom of Gujarát.

Bahádur Khán, with the leave of the Saint, his protector, started for Delhi. They say that at the moment of taking leave, the Saint said, "The kingdom of Gujarát has been confirmed in your name. If you have any other wish, express it that God may fulfil it." Bahádur Khán said, "Except the conquest of Chitor, I have no other wish, because the Ráná of Chitor has much harassed the Musalmáns of Ahmednagar, killing them, plundering their property, and taking them prisoners." The Saint hung down his head concentrating his thoughts in a trance like reverie. Bahádur Khán repeated his wish, but he replied not. On his repeating his wish the third time, the Saint said, "The conquest of Chitor depends upon the decline of your kingdom." Bahádur Khán said, "I agree to that a hundred times." The saint said, "If you will have it so who can alter the decree of fate?" After sometime the Saint said, "This is our last meeting. You will return here speedily, but you will not see me. See that you never neglect pleasing Sayad Mehmúd alias Sháh Budha, as in this will be your advantage."

In short, Bahádur Khán went to Chámpáner, and having obtained some little money from the officers of those parts started for Delhi. This happened in A. H. 931 (A.D. 1524). This year Sháh Sheikh Jí whose name was Sayad Jalál, son of Sayad Mehmúd, son of Kutbi-Álam Sayad Burhánud-din died at the age of seventy-five years and six months as is gatherable from the word Hazrat Sayad.

— They say that Bahádur Khán went from Chámpáner to Bánswálá, and from that place he went to the Ráná at Chitor, and stayed there some days. The Ráná came out to meet him with all honour and the mother of the Ráná called him her son, and was kind to him.

It is related that one day the nephew of the Ráná invited Bahádur Khan to dinner, and took him to his house. At night at a dancing entertainment one of the dancing girls, who was very beautiful, danced very well. Bahádur Khán gave much of his attention to her, and applauded her. The Ráná's nephew when he saw that Bahádur Khán was much inclined towards her, said out of jealousy: "Bahádur Khán, do you know who this dancing girl is?" He said, "Please say." That ill-fated one said, "She is the daughter of one of the respectable families of Ahmednagar, which country the Ráná formerly plundered," and he then mentioned the name. Immediately on hearing this, Bahádur Khán gave him a sword-cut on the waist which cut that ill-fated one in twain, and killed him. An uproar arose. Bahádur Khán taking up his blood-dripping sword stood up. The Rájputs surrounded him and wished to slay him. This news reaching the ears of the Ráná's mother, she came running to the spot, a dagger in her hand and cried, "If any one kills Bahádur Khán I shall rip open my belly." The Ráná heard of this and said: "Why did that ill-fated man say such words to the son of the king of Gujarát? He has only got the punishment for his folly. Now let no one kill Bahádur Khán or I shall ruin him." When affairs came to this pass Bahádur Khán left that place and went to Mewát. The Kháns of that place offered to put him up and aid him, but he refused to accept their offers, and went to Sultán Ibráhim Lodi, son of Sultán Sikandar king of Dehli. At that time the Sultán was fighting with His Majesty, whose Abode is in Paradise, the emperor Bábar near the village of Pánipat. The Sultán showed him much kindness, and what followed I will relate hereafter if God wills.

ACCOUNT OF THE ACCESSION TO THE THRONE OF SULTAN SIKANDAR, SON OF SULTAN MUZAFFAR, AND HIS ASSASSINATION IN THE COMMENCE-MENT OF HIS YOUTH AND REIGN.

On Friday, the twenty-second of the month of Jamádul Ákhir A. H. 932 (A. H. 1525 6), Sultán Muzaffar entered into the mercy of God as has been before related, and on the same day Sultán Sikandar, the son of Muzaffar, sat on the throne of the kingdom and shortly afterwards he went in the direction of Muhammadábád. They say that he passed by Batwá without visiting the shrine of the saints at that place. When he arrived near the tomb of Kutbi Álam Sayad Burhánuddín did not visit it and said, "Mián Sheikh Jí, the grandson of the Lord Kutbul Aktáb, was called by people the second Makhdúm Jahánián because forsooth, he prophesied that Bahádur Khán would be king of Gujarát, while Bahádur Khán himself seems to have vanished from the world!"

In short, when Sikandar Khán came to Muhammadábád on the twenty-fifth of the above month, he ascended the throne according to the custom of his ancestors, and to each of those who had served him in the days he was a prince he gave a title, and distributed 2,700 horses amongst his men. On seeing this the ministers and nobles of his father became disappointed. Even Imádul-Mulk, Khush Kadam, the Sultán's foster-brother, was grieved. The cause of this, I will relate hereafter if God wills.

At this time news arrived that Latif Khán had taken shelter with Bhím, Rájá of Munga,¹ in the hilly tracts of Sultánpur and Nazar-bár, and that several amirs were in correspondence with him. Sultán Sikandar, invested Malik Latif with the title of Shirzáh Khán, and, having given him 3,000 well equipped horses, sent him to expel

¹ Although the author places Munga in the hilly tracts of Nandurbár and Sultánpur, there is reason to believe that the place is Mehanga or Ohhota Udaipur. Rana Bhím of Munga and Rana Bhím of Pál seem to be the same person.

Latif Khán from the hills. When Shirzah Khán entered the defiles, the Rajputs and Kolis, occupying the heads of the narrow passes, commenced to fight, and Shirzah Khán with some famous nobles and 1,200 men were slain. When this news reached the Sultán, he appointed Kaisar Khán to take the field at the head of a large army. At this time several amirs joined Imádul-mulk and inspired him with the suspicion that the king contemplated his destruction, and enjoined him not to be neglectful or careless of this. The Malik said, "If the Sultán aims at my life, why should I not attempt his life before he deprives me of mine." They say that in these days Sultán Sikandar had a dream and saw the saints Kutbi Álam Makhdum Jaháníán and Sháh Álam and Sheikh Jí, and Sultán Muzaffar also with them. The Sultán, his deceased father, said to him, "Sikandar Khán my boy, get up. Thou art destined to occupy the throne no longer." Sháh Sheikh Jí said, "Ay, it is so." Sultán Sikandar awoke from sleep, affrighted; he recounted the night's dream to Yákub who had the title of Darya Khán saying: "My heart also says that Bahádur Khán will come, and that there will be war between us." The author of the Tárikh-i-Bahádur Sháhi writes that Darya Khán related this dream to Yúsuf bin Lutfulláh, and Yúsuf told me, and so it passed until it became well known. In short, that day after an hour the Sultán went to play chaugán or polo from which he returned when one watch of the day was passed. After his return to the palace he took his food. When two watches of the day had passed, that is at mid-day, he slept, and his attendants went to their houses.

Sayad Jalál Munawwar-ul-mulk says: "When the Sultán returned from playing chaugán, I and my brother Sayad Burhán-ud-din were standing in the market, and we saw that there was no man nor woman who did not that day come out from their houses and shops to see the beautiful Sultán pass by with his cortége, for they say that the Sultán was very good-looking, and men called him the second Joseph." In short, the Sultán in royal state and magnificence passed through the market to his palace. The nobles and soldiers saluted him, and returned to their houses. After a short time Imádul-mulk, having wrapped a piece of cloth round his head and ears, and accompanied by forty or fifty blood-thirsty well-armed desperate men, passed from his house to the King's palace. When he was passing through the market, men remarked: "The Malik is going to-day after sixteen days to pay respects to the Sultán." An hour had not elapsed when an uproar arose that Imád-ul-mulk had assassinated the Sultán. It seemed in the city as though the end of the world were come. Men in great wonder and astonishment were weeping and wailing with grief. "Oh God," said they, "what a terrible and sudden event this is!" From that day it seemed as if the blood of Sultán Sikandar washed away the words "tranquillity" and "prosperity" from the tablet of the kingdom of Gujarát. The first of the Sultáns of Gujarát, who was assassinated, was Sultán Sikandar, and, after this, from him up to Muzaffar III. son of Mehmúd II, every Sultán became a martyr. According to what the Prophet (on whom be peace) has said :—"He who introduces a new custom, on him be the evil of it and of the harm which is wrought in consequence of it;" all the wrongs that follow shall be written to the account of Imád-ul-Mulk the evil-doer. They say that when that false one to his salt entered the palace and drew near the king's sleeping apartment, he saw two men outside the curtain at the door of the sleeping chamber. One of these was Sayad Ílm-ud-din, son of Ahmed Bukhári, grandson of Sháh Álam, son of Kutbi Álam, and the other Malik Bairam bin Masúd. They were playing chess, and Malik Sondha, the door-keeper, was standing holding a corner of the curtain and Malik Pír Muhammad, a palace servant, was rubbing the feet of the Sultán, and the Sultán was asleep. No one else was present. Imád-ul-Mulk wished to pass through the curtain. Sondha, the door-keeper, said that the Sultán was asleep, but he was unable to say anything harsher to Imád-ul-Mulk, because the authority of the palace was in the hands of that ill-starred slave. Imád-ul-Mulk gave no answer to Malik Sondha, but taking Malik Bahár with him, he entered within the curtain, and seizing Malik Bahár's hand said, "Have you seen the crystal mirror that has come for the Sultán from Portugal?" This mirror was hanging at the lower side of the bed. The beauty of it was that when a lamp was lit, the reflection of many lamps appeared in it. It was a wonderful thing. The traitorous Bahár, said he had not seen it, so taking his hand he drew him near the bed of the Sultán. Bahár paused a moment. The wretch said, "Why do you hesitate? Strike!" Bahár, the unworthy, drew his sword. At this moment the Sultán awoke and said, "What is this?" Before the others could come up, that evil one struck a blow, and cut that tree of the garden of beauty and elegance in two pieces. After that he killed Malik Pír Muhammad, the servant, with one blow and grasping his naked blood-dripping sword, he and Imád-ul-Mulk issued forth. When the Sayad saw the catastrophe, he drew his sword on Imád-ul-Mulk. Imád-ul-Mulk said, "Do not be a rascal Sayad." The Sayad said, "Oh mannikin, he is a rascal who is false to his salt and who slays his king." The Sayad struck at him with his sword, but his sword struck in the roof, and broke. The Sayad advanced quickly, and struck with the broken blade on the head of the Malik, and inflicted a slight wound, but they slew the Sayad and Malik Bairam with their poniards. This happened on the fourth of the month of Shaâbân A. H. 932 (A.D. 1526, about the month of June). Praised be Alláh! not an hour had passed since the time that Sultán Sikandar had passed through the bazár, and had entered his palace in all the pomp and pageantry of royalty.

They say that they bore his body thence on a small broken cot, the dangling legs of which had parted from their sockets. In this manner they brought him to Hálol, which is ten kos from Chámpáner, and there buried him.

COUPLET.

"The revolution of the spheres does not besprinkle the head of Parviz with blood, Yet in a moment it makes Kisra lose his head and gives Parviz his crown.

Two hours before this thousands were waiting in the polo-field anxious to catch a glance of the Sultán's eye. Each one hovered like a moth round a candle to pay his respects to the Sultán, and if the Sultán returned the salutation by the meanest of his slaves, its happy recipient was so overjoyed that he was ready to walk on his head instead of his feet to receive it. And yet they say that at the time the mortal remains of this idolized one were being carried to Hálol, that from the fear and dread of that rascal of evil end, hardly forty persons came round to perform the prayers for the dead over the Sultán's bier.

In short, after he had made Sultán Sikandar a martyr, Imád-ul-mulk entered the harem of the Sultán, and took Nasír Khán, the youngest son of Sultán Muzaffar who was five or six years of age, and placing him on his lap seated himself on the throne and named the boy Mehmúd Sháh.¹ The army was also of the same mind with him and all the nobles, soldiers and servants, and attendants came, and saluted him. Three of the nobles did not join them. One of these was Khudáwand Khán, who was the vazír of Sultán Muzaffar and whom Sultán Sikandar had confirmed in the post; another was the Sultán's cup-bearer, Fateh Khán Budhu, a prince of Sindh, who was son-in-law to Sultán Muzaffar, and the husband of Sikandar's own sister; the third was Táji Khán Tariáni, who built the shrine of the king of Saints, the lord Sháh Álam.

¹ The placing the prince on his lap meant that he was to be his guardian and regent over the kingdom during his minority.

ACCOUNT OF THE FAITHLESSNESS OF IMADUL-MULK, THE BLIND OF HEART, IN CONNECTION WITH SULTÁN SIKANDAR, SON OF SULTÁN MUZAFFAR.

Reliable persons of Gujarát state that on the day of the accession of Sultán Sikandar to the throne, a slave of Bibí Ráni, of the name of Khush Kadam, who later obtained the title of Imádul-mulk, with a baton in his hand, was seen giving himself the airs of a minister, because at her death Bibí Ráni, the mother of Sultán Sikandar, had placed the young Sultán's hand¹ in the hand of the slave. From that day the idea had entered the evil mind of the wicked man that in the reign of Sultán Sikandar he would be the chief minister. Thus on the day of the Sultán's accession when the chief Hindu merchants of the city came to congratulate the Sultán, at the time of their taking leave, he asked for orders to bestow on them dresses of honour and titles. The Sultán said, "Let some one tell Khudáwand Khán," who was the chief vazír of the deceased Sultán, "to give each of them honours befitting his position." On hearing this order envy took possession of the mind of the traitorous slave, but he said nothing at that time. The Sultán sent for Khudáwand Khán. He came and stood outside the private curtain. Imádul-mulk though he saw him, disregarded his presence without announcing it to the Sultán. Khudáwand Khán contrary to custom, waited a long time outside the curtain. At length one of the Sultán's servants told the Sultán that Khudáward Khán was standing outside. The Sultán said "call him in." At that time Imádul-mulk pretended as if he was not aware of the Khán's arrival. The Sultán then called in a loud voice with much respect, "Khán Jí, be pleased to enter." Khudáwand Khán entering placed his head at the Sultán's feet, and commenced to weep. The Sultán also wept, and embraced the Khán and said, " May the post of minister, with all good luck, be with you as before." The Khán said, " This slave is old and prays for his emancipation, so that he may sit in a corner and remain occupied in praying for blessings on you." The Sultán said, " No one but you is fit for the office of minister." He bestowed on Khudáwand Khán the ministerial dress of honour. Thus the fire of envy in the mind of that slave became more than ever inflamed.

¹ A dying person placing the hand of a dear one into that of a trusted friend means to ask the friend to extend the hand of help to the loved one through life.

It is related that after some days, Imádul-mulk of his own authority without obtaining the Sultán's permission and without consulting Khudáwand Khán invested an eunuch, who was the head of the police and city Magistrate of Ahmedábád with the title of Muhibbul-mulk, and granted him an increase of allowances, and brought him to the Sultán and said: " This eunuch does good service, therefore he has been invested with the title of Muhibbul-mulk, and his allowances also have been increased." The Sultán said, " Have you given him this title? I am no child, I am both wise and capable and whosoever acts thus without my orders acts wrongly. The investiture and increasing the allowances pertain to the office of Khudáwand Khán who is the vazir of the Kingdom. Interference by another with his duties and powers shall be fruitless." So saying he rejected his petition. As this slave however was headstrong, and popular with the army, Khudáwand Khán for the sake of peace said to the Sultán, " Let the title be granted to him for the sake of Imádul-mulk, and you can increase his allowances at another time." The Sultán remained silent and silence is half-consent. On this that ill-fated slave became very enraged and after that began to plot the death of the Sultán, and began to conspire with the amírs and soldiers who were on his side, and to win over to his side by gentleness and courtesy the hearts of those who were little inclined towards him. They say that he used to send for them one by one to his house and inquire into their circumstances, asking, for instance, " How many children have you?" When the person asked gave him the number, he would ask: " Have you married them or not?" If in giving a negation, want of money was given as the cause he would say, " Borrow from me and do the good deed by your children and marry them." In this way he distributed gold to men, making them write bonds for the amount he pretended to lend them which he afterwards tore up. He thus noosed the necks of men with the string of his obligation, and made with them contracts of partisanship. Sultán Sikandar, ignorant of this, in the pride of youth, fortune and pleasure, passed his days like the days of Id and his nights like the nights of the Shab-i-barát.¹ Each day he devised a new pleasure. He devised and brought into fashion a new gown called after him the Sikandar Sháhi jámah. Whatever he desired he found ready at hand. He had a slave girl whose name was Názukleher, who was the object of his passionate attachment. They say that all the women of Gujarát agreed that a woman like Názukleher had never been in the harem of any of the kings of Gujarát, and further that in beauty and good qualities and virtue, Gujarát had never produced her equal. On the other hand, they said that there was not to be seen in that age a young man so pleasant and handsome as Sikandar Khán.

It is said that after the martyrdom of Sultán Sikandar, Názukleher went to the harem of Sultán Bahádur and Bahádur also was very fond of her. When Sultán Bahádur conquered Mándu, and brought the whole country of Málwá under his rule, he one day ordered that dancing girls of all classes, Domnis, Pátars, Kumáchnis, Parí-sháns and Lolis should be summoned to his presence. Band after band of women, dressed and jewelled in emulation of each other, to the number of about a thousand of every kind and from every country, presented themselves before the Sultán. They say that many among them were beautiful and some by universal suffrage of great beauty. Sultán Bahádur sent for them one by one, and bestowing on them presents, gave them leave to retire. Seeing this, Shujáát Khán, who was one of the principal amírs and a companion of the Sultán, said, "Of all these beauties who with eyelashes like arrows, and eyebrows like bows, seeing every little thing and true of aim who have gathered before your Majesty, has not the arrow of the glance of any of them struck the mark of your Majesty's heart?" The Sultán said, "Shujáát Khán, I have in my harem a concubine before the Sun of whose beauty the loveliness of lesser stars like these fades and disappears. I will show her to you some day." They say that after a few days the Sultán while under the influence of wine became displeased with Názukleher for some little fault, and in a fit of uncontrollable passion drew his sword and clove her in two halves. At that moment he remembered the promise he had made to Shujáât Khán. Covering Názuikleher with a counterpane he sent for Shujáât Khán, and told him : "Shujáât Khán, I had promised to show you the girl whose beauty was like the refulgence of the Sun. To-day," said he, "by the decree of God, she has expired. Living you never saw her. See her dead, and observe what a paragon of beauty she was." So saying he drew the quilt off from her face. Shujáât Khán looked at her. She lay in her blood like the morning Sun in the midst of twilight, looking pale like the Moon. He threw himself on the ground and said, "Alas, what has happened? How has this come to pass." The Sultán also became very grieved, and dashed his head against the ground, but it was of no avail. Hence poets have said—

¹ The two Ids are Musalmán holidays, the festivities connected with which take place during the day. The Shab-i-barát which occurs in Shaábán, the eighth month of the Muslim year, is celebrated by illuminations and fireworks during the night.

"The son of man out from the root groweth not up again, Like the tree which struck at the root springeth up into new life."

They say that when Sultán Sikandar used to ride out all who saw him, whether man or woman, admired him, but from respect for the Sultán, no one could express his admiration. One day a man pretending to be a platonic lover said, "I am enamoured of the Sultán." This news reached the Sultán who sent for him and said, "He is a good man, but appears shameless. Tell him I will give him a hundred Ashrafis,¹ but he must abstain from this thing, and never again show himself of such mind. If he does, I shall order that his head and beard should be shaved and I will have him placed on a donkey, and his shame shall be published in every street and lane." The platonic lover agreed to receive the gold. The Sultán sending for the gold, ordered it to be put in a bag and tied it round his neck, and ordered that his head and beard should be shaved and he mounted on an ass and paraded through the streets and alleys that no one should again make such a false claim. And in truth, had he shown himself pleased with the disgrace in which a true lover glories, such a day would not have overtaken him. He who flies from disgrace, Love ruins his honour.

It is related that when Sultán Sikandar sat on the throne all the nobles and great men went to congratulate him except Sháh Budha, son of Sháh Sheikhji Bukhári, who was then the chief of the Sayads of Batwá. Sháh Budha did not go on account of the bad understanding between him and Sultán Sikandar. And that was as follows :

¹ The gold Ashraf or Seraph, of which Hawkins (A.D. 1609-1611) says : "Seraffins Ekberi which be ten rupees a piece." Thomas' Chron. Pathán Kings of Dehli, 425.

Some time after the death of Sháh Sheikhji Bahádur Khán left Gujarát and went to Delhi. Some time after these events Sikandar Khán said to Sháh Budha, "Your saint is dead, and his disciples have become recluses" (a proverb expressive of the emptiness of curses or blessings). Sháh Budha said in reply, "The Saint is not dead. Rest assured that the friends of God die not, but move as it were from one house to another house, nor is the disciple wandering in a distressed condition, by this token that the prophecy concerning him will surely come to pass, and your kingdom is like a mirage or a bubble. It has no foundation and will not last." On hearing this speech the Sultán became more than ever displeased with Sháh Budha and withdrew the grant of Batwá which was enjoyed by the Sayads, and bestowed it on Sayad Muhammad Bukhári who had the title of Sádát Khán, and who was one of the sons of Sháh Alam, but he refused it. The end of it was that the truth of the prophecy soon became apparent. The whole duration of the reign of Sultán Sikandar was but two months and sixteen days, when the traitor Imádul-mulk Khushkadam slew the Sultán. Wise people have said : "Oh God, whomsoever thou wishest to cast down, thou throwest him amongst dervishes. We seek protection with God from it." The Sultán was the disciple of Sayad Mírán Jí the son of Sayad Sultán, the son of Hazrat Sháh Alam.

In short on the day of the accession of Nasír Khán to whom Imádul-mulk gave the title of Sultán Mehmúd as has been mentioned above, he distributed dresses of honour, horses and titles to the nobles and soldiery, but jágirs which are the results and supporters of titles he gave not. People said, "Titles without jágirs are things that bring shame." In the end the greater part of the nobles and soldiery became disgusted with him, and thirsty for his blood on account of his atrocity, i.e., the murder of Sultán Sikandar, but without a leader they were unable to do anything, so each of them retired to his estate. Disaffection, which was hitherto concentrated, began to spread forth. For the sake of doing something Imádul-mulk wrote to Imádul-mulk of Elichpur by way of friendship to threaten the Sultánpur and Nazarbár frontiers stating that he would pay him in gold for the expense of the march. And he wrote in like manner to Ráná Sánghá, and also assembled the zamindárs and sent a petition to the emperor Bábar and asked for aid.

The author of the Tarikh-i-Bahádur-Sháhi writes that he was at that time in Wadnagar, and that he sent a message to Táji Khán at Dhandhúká that Imádul-mulk was seeking aid from the emperor Bábar, and that this would cause the downfall of the dynasty of the Sultáns of Gujarát. He requested Táj Khán to think well and to write a petition to Bahádur Khán also and start it off with a swift courier. At that time Bahádur Khán at the invitation of the nobles and leading men of Jaunpur had, without leave, left Sultán Ibráhím Lodi who was engaged with the emperor Bábar on the plain of Pánipat, and had started for Jaunpur and encamped in the garden of Pánipat. In that place Páyindah Khan Afghán who had come on behalf of the nobles of Jaunpur met Bahádur Khán. He said : " All the nobles of Jaunpur consider you their king, and are awaiting your arrival, and have sent me in your service that having presented this petition in your presence I should lead you there. It is a welcome thing. You should not delay." The Sultán was willing to go, but at this moment the letter of Khurram Khán containing the news of the death of Sultán Muzaffar, and the accession of Sultán Sikandar, arrived, and it was also stated that the nobles and soldiers were all awaiting his arrival. If he should now arrive quickly, it was certain that the kingdom would pass into his hands, as the people and soldiers were also displeased with Sultán Sikandar. After the arrival of this letter Bahádur Khán remained for three days in that camp, and having performed the ceremonies of mourning, he gave Páyindah Khán his leave on the fourth day, and travelled in the direction of Gujarát with great speed. When he reached Chitor, Sayad Sher, son of Muínud-din Afghán, who, after the murder of Sultán Sikandar, had left Gujarát to seek Bahádur Khán explained to him one by one the news of the murder of Sultán Sikandar Khán and the treachery of Imádul-mulk and the enthronement of Nasír Khán. Bahádur Khán said, " If God wills, when I reach Muhammadábád, I will impale this traitor," and he started thence also. Prince Chánd Khán, who was with him, parted from him there, and went to Sultán Mehmúd, King of Málwá, and his brother Ibráhím Khan went with Bahádur Khán. Thence he came to Dungarpur. On hearing this news Táj Khán leaving Dhandhuká proceeded to meet him. At this time the Prince Latíf Khán coming to the neighbourhood of Dhandhuká, sent a message to Táj Khán, to the effect that if the Khán would join him, he would entrust the whole government of Gujarát to him. Táj Khán sent some money to Latíf Khán and stated : " Before this I have bound myself to Bahádur Khán, I cannot now make any arrangement to the contrary. It is better that you should at present retire."

On hearing of the return of Bahádur Khán the nobles who had identified themselves with Imádul-mulk and his partisans began to tremble. Imádul-mulk sent Azdul-mulk the leper with 300 horses from the Sultán's stables and fifty elephants from the elephant stables, and appointed him to the post of Morásá with orders to stay there and suffer no one to pass by that way to join Bahádur Khán. And Azdul-mulk started for Morásá, Razi-ul-mulk and Khurram Khán having come from Muhammadábád started with the view of meeting Bahádur Khán who arrived at Mángrech¹ otherwise called Muhammadnagar, and several other partisans of Bahádur Khán whose names were, Azam Khán son of Píru or Badú, Malik Yúsuf bin Lutfulláh, Ráji Muhammad bin Faríd, Malik Masúd and others who, from fear of Imádul-mulk, had fled to remote places came and now met Bahádur Khán. Bahádur Khán went thence to Morásá, and thence to Harsol, and thence to Singúrgáon. At this time Khurram Khán, Razi-ul-mulk, and the greater number of Muzaffar Sháh's nobles came and kissed the Sultán's feet. The next day he pitched his royal tents at Nehrwálá.

ACCOUNT OF THE ACCESSION OF BAHÁDUR SHÁH AND THE REFULGENCE OF HIS FAME THROUGH GOD'S AID.

The author of the Tárikh-i-Bahádur-Sháhi writes, that on the 26th day of the month of Ramazán A. H. 932 (A. D. 1525) in that camp Táj Khán and Mujáhidul-Mulk and the writer of the Bahádur Sháhi, and the chief men of the great city of Ahmedábád obtained the honour of kissing the Sultán's carpet, and from that place with his kingly umbrella and with all pomp and state, the Sultán marched to Ahmedábád, and entered the city by the Kálúpúr gate. He went first to visit the tombs of his ancestors Mehmúd Sháh, Ahmed Sháh, and Sultán Kutbuddin, which are situated in the Mánek Chauk, and prayed over them, and he then went to put up in the royal palace in the city which is called the Bhadr saying according to the verse of the Kuráán: "O Lord, locate me in a good residence, for Thou art the best giver of residences."² On 27th night of Ramazán of the above year all the nobles of the king's party presented themselves. According to the rules of Sultán Muzaffar, he appointed to each of them his place, and, sitting with them, partook of food and each one of them thanked God with joy at the presence of the Sultán. The city of Ahmedábád, acquired a new beauty and glory, and the country of Gujarát which had become clouded by the absence of Bahádur. Khán, gained lustre by the rising of the sun of his presence and the phantom of unrest vanished from the hearts of the people of Gujarát. On hearing this news Imádul-mulk advanced to his followers one year's pay in ready money from the imperial treasury and made them swear straitly by the Kuráán that they would not desert Mehmúd Sháh. The nobles used to take his gold, and used to leave Muhammadábád and repair to Sultán Bahádur. Bahá-ul-Mulk and Dáwarul-Mulk, the two greatest nobles attached to Imádul-mulk and who were concerned in the murder of Sultán Sikandar, also came over to Sultán Bahádur.

¹ Another edition has Kapadvanj. ² The Kuráán, Chap. "The True Believers."

The author of the Tárikh-i-Bahádur-Sháhi goes on to say that on the morning of the day of the Id the Sultán ordered him to bring the elephants arrayed and caparisoned to the Darbár. The Sultán, having bathed and clothed himself in state robes, came out and entered the Singár Mandap Palace the doors and walls of which were gilded, and there took his seat. He ordered khiḍāts, or dresses of honour to be presented to Táji Khán and other nobles. Thirty-two persons as below-mentioned received titles on that day:—(1) Khurram Khán bin Sikander Khán was given the title of Khán-Khánán, (2) Safdar Khán, the title of Alam Khán, (3) the son of Khán-Khánán, the title of Nizám Khán, (4) Saádul-Mulk, the title of Shams Khán, (5) the son of Nizám-ul-Mulk, the title of Mubári-zul-Mulk, (6) the son of Shams Khán, the title of Saádul-Mulk, (7) Malik Táji Khán, the title of Wajih-ul-Mulk, (8) Malik Kutb Shamaâchi, the title of Ikbál Khán, (9) Bahádur-ul-Mulk, the title of Alif Khán, (10) Mujá-hid-ul-Mulk, the title of Mujá-hid-Khán, (11) Násirul-Mulk, the title of Katlak Khán, (12) the son of Mujá-hid-Khán, the title of Majá-hid-ul-Mulk, (13) the son of Katlak Khán, the title of Násir-ul-Mulk, (14) Maudúd-ul-Mulk, the title of Taghlak Khán, (15) Malik Badruddin, the title Maudud-ul-Mulk, (16) Malik Ráyat, son of Mujáhid-ul-Mulk, the title of Násir Khán, (17) Malik Sher, the title of Nasrat-ul-Mulk, (18) Malik Mustufá, the title of Sher Andáz Khán, (19) Malik Muzaffar, the title of Asad-ul-Mulk, (20) the son of Asad-ul-Mulk, the title of Sháistah Khán, (21) the son of Malik Tagh-lak, the title of Seif Khán, (22) Suleiman, son of Mujáhid-ul-Mulk, the title of Mansúr Khán, (23) Abú, the son of Azhdar Khán, the title of Azhdar Khán, (24) the son of Latíf Khán Báiwál, the title of Shirzáh Khán, (25) Shams Khán, the title of Daryá Khán, (26) Shams Khán bin Taghlak Khán, the title of Husein Khán, (27) Chánd Khán Bhandári, the title of Huzabr Khán, (28) Kúmbhá Gohel, the title of Ráyán Ráo, (29) Malik Sábib bin Mujáhid-ul-mulk, the title of Habíb Khán.¹

After this the Sultán mounted his elephant and went to the Ídgáh, the place for the Íd prayers, and the people of the city delighted and joyful, blessed and praised him. After this, on the second of Shawwál he went to and alighted in his palace of Khamdhrol, and thence he marched to Mehmúdábád. At that camp Muázam Khán came with some nobles and kissed his feet. Marching thence on the way to Nadiád he had to halt two days at Sivanj owing to the river Sídhi being in flood. Many men came from Muhammadábád to meet him, and he pardoned all those who came after taking gold from Imádul-mulk. On the 11th of Shawwál, marching from Nadiád, he crossed the river Mahi by the Khánpur ford. Imádul-mulk now sent Ázd-ul-mulk to Baroda and appointed Muháfiz Khán Bakḳál to the outpost of Dhánejj with the view that if these two great nobles who were chief men, were separated from him, Sultán Bahádur would, on their account, say nothing to him.

When the affairs of a man become troubled,
Whatever he does avails him not.

Imádul-mulk also secretly sent for Prince Latíf Khán, because Prince Latíf Khán was of age (and not a minor like the prince he had set up), thinking that in case he was forced to fly he would elevate the regal umbrella over his head, and fight with Sultán Bahádur. Latíf Khán came to Dhánejj. Imádul-mulk, however, became bewildered as to what to do. At this time Bahádur Khán entered Ahmedábád.

They say that on the 11th of Shawwál Imádul-mulk severed his connection with Prince Nasír Khán, went to his house, and never again inquired about him. The head chamberlain of the royal palace kept Nasír Khán in surveillance as a state prisoner.

They say that 5,000 men in Imádul-mulk's service assembled at his house, and resolved to guard the life and honour of Imádul-mulk with their own if Sultán Bahádur regarded him with anger. But when the ensigns of Bahádur Khán entered the city, two or three hundred men alone remained with Imádul-mulk, and the rest all fled and concealed themselves in their houses, and the chief men among them left the city. When the Sultán crossed the river Mahí he did not wait for his army, and the whole army had not yet crossed the river, when taking with him 400 horse and some elephants which had crossed the river, he pushed on to Hálol. He first visited Sultán Sikandar's grave, and sent on Táj Khán with 300 horse to surround the house of the miscreant murderer of that Sultán.

¹ Out of the thirty-two persons who are said to have received the distinction of titles, twenty-nine only are enumerated in the text.

They say that when the news of the arrival of Sultán Bahádur at Hálol reached Imádul-mulk, Khwájáh Mánek, the son of Jalál and Yúsuf, the son of Mubáriz-ul-mulk, said, "Imádul-mulk, to fly is better than to stay, for Sultán Bahádur will not leave you alive." He replied, "How shall I flee? I see naked swords on all sides of me, I cannot move hence, how then shall I run?" The murder of Sultán Sikandar had taken such a hold of his mind that he could not take even a step.

Some say that he said thus: "What injury have I done to Sultán Bahádur that I should fly? Had I not slain Sikandar Khán, how could Sultán Bahádur have reached this high position?"

Táj Khán with 300 Sawárs quickly arrived at, and surrounded the house of Imádul-mulk.

That wretch (Imádul-mulk) fled from his house and concealed himself in the house of Sháh Jí, son of Siddík, the executive officer of the ministers. The people of the town attacked and plundered his house. His wives, daughters, and female slaves were all carried off. In the meantime the Sultán entered the city, arrived in front of the house of Khudáwand Khán Vazír, and admitted Khudáwand to the honour of kissing his feet. Khudáwand Khán accompanied his victorious stirrup. As the Sultán placed his foot in the royal palace Táj Khán came and reported, "We have given up the house of that traitor to plunder, but we did not find him in it, perhaps he may be concealed somewhere in the city." The Sultán commanded Kaisar Khán and Kabírr-ul-mulk the police officer and magistrate, to search for and capture him, and with prosperity and good fortune alighted in the royal palace. Half a ghadí (twelve minutes) had not elapsed, when a slave of Khudáwand Khán having captured Imádul-mulk dragged him into the Darbár, his head bare, his hands tied behind his shoulders and with a hundred indignities. An order was given to confine him in a small room of the Dil Kushá Palace. The Sultán then ordered Táj Khán to ask the unhappy man why he had murdered the Sultán's brother. When Táj Khán asked him, he said, "What could I do, all the nobles had combined to kill Sikandar Khán." Táj Khán said, "You are a slave and were the slave of Sikandar Khán, why did you join the Sultán's enemies?" To this he gave no reply. All those who were present cursed him. The Sultán then went to see the room where Sultán Sikandar was murdered. The author of the Tárikh-i-Bahádur Sháhi states that the Sultán ordered him to send for Táj Khán from the Dil Khushá Palace, and that he brought him. Sultán Bahádur showed to Táj Khán the place of Sultán Sikandar's murder, and heaved a deep sigh and ordered that "Bad Kadam" (the Evil of Presence) meaning "Khush Kadám" (the Auspicious of Presence), which was the original name of Imádu-l-mulk, should be crucified on the morrow in front of the Darbár. and that they should tear to pieces Seifuddin and Ali who were his accomplices.

They say that when they were taking Imádu-l-mulk to the impaling stake some one said, "Repeat the creed." He said, "How shall I say it? My tongue will not utter the words." Alas! it is the fate of him who shall act thus with his master to be ruined both in this world, and in the next. They crucified Imádu-l-mulk and Seifuddin and Ali on the 13th of the month of Shawwál, and on that day Muftih-ul-mulk, the son of Malik Tawakkul, a noble of Mehmúd Sháh's was ennobled with of the title of Imádu-l-mulk and was given the post of a minister.

In a short time all the ill-fated ones who were concerned in Sultán Sikandar's murder were killed in misery and pain, and Bahár, the villain, who was the actual perpetrator of the murder of Sultán Sikandar and was wounded on the day of the murder by Sayad Ilmuddin, remained concealed some days, but was eventually captured. The Sultán ordered him to be flayed and then crucified. Ázdu-l-mulk and Muháfiz Khán, who had fled to the mountains of Pál, joined Latíf Khán. They collected the Hindu chiefs of those parts and wished to raise a rebellion, but the good-fortune of Bahádur Sháh was daily on the ascendant, and they were unable to effect their purpose. The hand of Sultán Bahádur like a vernal rain cloud rained gold and jewels, and through hopes of receiving his largess the soldiers and nobles were not willing to go even to their houses, and all day remained present in his service. In those days there was a great famine. The Sultán ordered food to be prepared in certain places for all-comers, and when he went out riding, he never bestowed on any one anything less than an Ashrafi or gold coin in alms; and thus the rich and the poor of the city passed their days.

in ease and prosperity. The fame of the generosity of Sultán Bahádúr became so great that it threw the name of Hátim¹ into the shade.

On the 14th of the month of Zulkaád A. H. 932 (A. D. 1525) according to the custom of his ancestors Sultán Bahádúr ascended the royal throne, and gave the nobles and ministers valuable dresses of honour. He presented out of the treasury one year's pay to each soldier and hundred and fifty persons were ennobled by titles whose names for the sake of brevity I have omitted. He then retired to the private apartment and associated with the great and the noble, and after partaking of food with them he bestowed on each of them honours and rewards. Each one, glad and joyful, returned to his house, and praised and blessed the Sultán. He entrusted the place of minister to Táj Khán.

After some time news was received that Azd-ul-mulk and Muháfiz Khán, having joined Prince Latíf Khán, desired to excite a rebellion in Nazarbár. Táj Khán was, therefore, ordered to prepare an army to repulse them. Táj Khán represented that it would be proper to send Gházi Khán, the son of Ahmed Khán, for this work. The King said, "When I sat on the throne, I doubled his allowances. I now re-double them." He ordered Gházi Khán to go in the direction of Nadiád with a powerful army. After the Sacrifice Id Shujáât Khán, otherwise called Hájí Muhammad, fled and went to Prince Latíf Khán in Pál. The end of the business was that Táj Khán represented that the flight of Shujá-ul-mulk was at the instigation of Kaisar Khán. The Sultán said, "If the matter is so, Kaisar Khán must be captured." Táj Khán represented that not only Kaisar Khán, but Alif Khán and Dáwarul-mulk also who were accomplices of Imádul-mulk in the murder of Sultán Sikandar and were corresponding with Latíf Khán should be captured. When the King was convinced of this, he dismissed Alif Khán whom he was appointing to march against Latíf Khán and arrested him with the other two nobles and they were all three beheaded. This happened in the year of his accession to the throne, that is, in A. H. 932 (A. D. 1525). After some time, Gházi Khán reported to the effect that Azd-ul-mulk and Muháfiz Khán and Bhím, Rájá of Pál, having joined Latíf Khán, had raided and sacked one of the villages of Sultánpur. That when Gházi Khán was informed of this, he marched against them. A great fight took place, but that through the good fortune of the King Azd-ul-mulk and Muháfiz Khán fled, and Rájá Bhím and his brother were slain in battle, and Latíf Khán fell wounded into their hands. Sultán Bahádur sent Muhibb-ul-mulk with speed to bring Latíf Khán. Muhibb-ul-mulk taking Latíf Khán returned to meet the Sultán. On the way Latíf Khán died at the village of Murghdarah and they buried him there, removing his body thence after a short time and committing it to the dust under the dome by the side of the dome on the tomb of Sultán Sikandar in the village of Hálol. After this Nasír Khán and three other princes were poisoned and killed by Bahádur Sháh, and were also buried near Sultán Sikandar's shrine. The news of the decapitation of Kaisar Khán and the above-mentioned nobles having reached the extremities of Gujarát, Rájá Ráisingh of Pál plundered the town of Dohad. When Sultán Bahádur came to know of this, he ordered Táj Khán to lay waste and pillage the whole country of Pál. About this time Ashraf-ul-mulk, servant of the king, who in the time of Sikandar Khán, had been taken by Ikbál Khán and confined in the fort of Mándu, was brought thence.¹

¹ Hátim, commonly known as Hátim of Tai, was an Arab chief who flourished just before the Prophet. His unbounded liberality and chivalric generosity were so great that among a people so generous as the Arabs his name became immortal for them.

To resume, Táj Khán having entered the Pál mountains laid all Ráisingh's country even with the dust, and the fort of his refuge was dismantled. They say that in the month that Táj Khán remained in the country of Pál on this expedition, that no casualty occurred among Táj Khán's men save in respect of one man by name Hasan Muhammad, who was killed. All the rest of the army returned safe and laden with booty, and were admitted to the honour of kissing the Sultán's feet.

On the 15th of Rabi-ul-awwal, A. H. 933 (A. D. 1526), the Sultán went on a hunting expedition in the direction of Cambay. When he arrived at Cambay, one of the sons of Malik Ayáz named Ilyás, who has been mentioned, came and met the Sultán. He informed the Sultán that his elder brother Is-hák, had become a rebel, at the instigation of the Hindu chiefs of Sorath, and that ruining the good name of his house he had with 5000 horse advanced from Nawánagar and had come to the port of Dív. It was his intention by deceit and stratagem, to enter that island, and, after expelling all the Musalmán soldiers and merchants, to make it over to the Firangís. Mehmúd Áká the admiral, learning of this circumstance had filled ships with fighting men and cannon and muskets, and had opposed Is-hák, killing many Hindus with his artillery. On hearing of these matters, Sultán Bahádur started by forced marches from Cambay. On the first day he camped at Manili, thence he marched to Gúndi, thence to Dhandhúka, thence to Ránpur and from Ránpur to Jasdan. When Is-hák heard that the Sultán had come in person he fled. He came to the Sorath frontier, and started for the Ran, which is a creek of salt water.

¹ The vagueness of the text here seems to be the result of some words being omitted.

The Sultán came from Jasdan to Wasáwar, and thence he came to Deoli, a town situated fifteen kos from the fort of Júnágadh, and it was here that news was received that Is-hak had fled in the direction of the Ran and the Khán Khánán was ordered to pursue that rebel. They say that when Is-hák arrived near the Ran, Tughlak Khán, who was the officer in charge of the district of Morbi, came quickly to attack him. Is-hák turning joined battle. Tughlak Khán was defeated. At this time news arrived that the Khán Khánán was coming, Is-hák crossed the Ran, and the Khán Khánán encamped on the shore of the Ran.

Sultán Bahádur after parting with the Khán Khánán at Deoli, remained ten days in that camp, and returning thence came to Mángrol. From Mángrol he marched to the village of Chorwár, thence to the town of Pátan in Delwára, thence to the town of Korinár, and thence to the town of Korbá or Korbud or Gorpur. He ordered his army to encamp at Nawánagar or Delwára and himself went to Div. Another son of Malik Ayáz, called Malik Túghá, who was in Div, was admitted to the honour of kissing the carpet. The Sultán remained a month at Div. After that having entrusted Div to the charge of Kiwám-ul-mulk, and Júnágadh to Mujáhid Khán Bhikam, he turned in the direction of Ahmedábád. About this time he heard that the Ráná had sent his son Vikramájít with suitable presents to him. From Div Sultán Bahádur marched to the town of Talájá, and thence to the port of Ghoghá, whence by forced marches he went direct to the exalted city of Ahmedábád halting no where in the way.

The son of Ráná SÁNGA was admitted to the honour of kissing his feet, and the Sultán then remained in his capital for one month in pleasure and enjoyment.

He then went to Cambay, and after a stay there of three days, he returned to Ahmedábád. After a sojourn of some days in the capital he went in the direction of Nándod for hunting. The Rájá of Nándod came and kissed the carpet. Thence the Sultán went to the port of Súrat, and thence embarking in a boat, he went to Ránder, and returning to Súrat he marched in haste and arrived in one day and night at Muhammadábád, and spent the four months of the rains at Muhammadábád Chánpáner. After the rains he gave the son of the Ráná leave to return to Chittaur. In A. H. 934 (A. D. 1527), he again went to the island of Dív, and spent some days there in ease and pleasure. After that he rode one night and at sunrise arrived at Cambay. The rapidity of Sultán Bahádur's movements became proverbial. If any one travelled a long distance in a short time they used to say "he has travelled with the swiftness of Bahádur."

After remaining in Cambay for several days, he again embarked and sailed for the port of Ghogha and from Ghogha again sailed for Dív. He stayed at Dív for two days, and thence embarking on board a boat he returned to Cambay, and from Cambay set out for his capital. On his way thither he ordered the construction of the city walls of Broach. After this he took an army into the country of Wágar, and halted there for some days, and he marched thence, and encamped at Kapadwanj. Here the Rájá of Dúngarpur came, and met him. The Sultán now took his army to Dúngarpur and for some days he amused himself in fishing on the Dúngarpur lake, and sent his army to ravage the territories of certain Hindu chiefs of those parts. After this, the Sultán came to Ahmednagar, and from Ahmednagar he went to Patan to visit the tomb of his great ancestor Sultán Muzaffar, and he bestowed honours, riches and rewards on the learned and the devout of that town and returned to Ahmedábád. From Ahmedábád on the 1st of the month of Shaâbán, he went in one day to Muhammadábád Chámpáner and on the new moon of Ramazán of the above year having left all his army in the city, he himself with some special well-equipped followers went to see the city walls of Broach which had been newly built, and thence on the 9th of the above month he came to Cambay. Here, as one day he was walking on the seashore a ship came from Dív. The people of the vessel said that some Firangi ships had arrived at Dív and that Kíwám-ul-mulk had imprisoned all the Firangis and taken their property. The Sultán on hearing this went to Dív when Kíwám-ul-mulk produced the Firangis before him. The Sultán offered them the choice of Islám and all of them adopted the religion of Islám. After this the Sultán, with the intention of going to Muhammadábád, came to Cambay and thence went to the above city, and became occupied in enjoyment and pleasure. At this time news arrived that the Sultán's sister's son Muhammad Khán the son of Ádil Khán with 2,500 horse had gone to the aid of Imád-ul-mulk of Káwel which is a fort in the country of Birár. Nizámul-mulk with the officers whose duty it was to protect the roads of the Dakhan, viz., Baríd ruler of Bídár and Khudáwánd Khán Bantari and Ainul-mulk, and others having united, fought with Imád-ul-mulk, and Imád-ul-mulk was defeated. After that a petition of Adil Khán came to the following effect: "Imád-ul-mulk from the time of the deceased Sultán Muzaffar up to the time of our Sultán has been a devoted servant of your kingdom and every year sends a tribute of elephants of war. The nobles of the Dakhan having united, have expelled him from his country, and he has no other refuge except your court." Imád-ul-mulk also sent a petition and explained his condition. On hearing this the Sultán said, "The nobles of the Dakhan are all oppressors. Imád-ul-mulk is a victim of oppression and to succour the oppressed is incumbent on religious kings." On the arrival of these petitions on the 14th of Zilhajj of the above year in the middle of the rainy season the Sultán marched and camped at Hálol, and sent orders in all directions to collect troops. Another petition now came from Imád-ul-mulk that his people were besieged in the fort of Banhari or Bathri and that the fort had fallen into the hands of the enemy. On hearing this the Sultán at once marched, and in the month of Muharram A. H. 985 (A. D. 1528), he arrived at Baroda, and halted there a month.

The author of the Tárikh-Báhádur-Sháhi writes that he was then Dárogháh or superintendent of a department in Cambay, and an order came also to him, and he joined the army. What he has written he says he has written as an eyewitness: When the army was assembled, the Sultán marched from Baroda. At this time Jaáfar Khán son of Imád-ul-mulk arrived and kissed the Sultán's feet. The Sultán showed him great kindness and consoled him. When the victorious army reached Nazarbár, Imád-ul-mulk and Muhammad Khán came and had an interview. The Sultán conferred favours on them and bestowed on Imádul-mulk a girdle and a jewelled sword with a gilt umbrella, and marching thence arrived at the fort of Gálnah, and from Gálnah marched to Devgad also called Daultábád, and on the 2nd of the month of Rabí-ul-Ákhir pitched his royal tent in the vicinity of the fortress of Daultábád. They say that in this expedition a hundred thousand horsemen and nine hundred elephants like mountains accompanied the Sultán. When the garrison of Daultábád saw the army of Sultán Bahádur Sháh from their lofty citadel they began to tremble with fear. Suddenly a part of the army of Nizám-ul-mulk who lay in ambush behind the hill, commenced fighting with the van of the Sultán's army. The army of Bahádur Sháh like the waves of the boisterous sea received the attack of the enemy. The Dakhanis were defeated. In this battle three noblemen were killed on the Sultán's side. They were Mukhlis-ul-mulk, Muhib-bul-mulk, and Muhib-bul-mulk's son. When the army of Nizám-ul-mulk was defeated, Sultán Bahádur besieged Daulatábád. While so engaged the ambassador of Nizám-ul-mulk came and told the Sultán that Nizám-ul-mulk was willing to abide by the order and will of the Sultán. He demanded an assurance from the Sultán for Nizám-ul-mulk's safety to allow him to come and pay his respects. The Sultán gave his parole, and the ambassador took leave stating that in ten days Nizám-ul-mulk would do himself the honour of waiting upon the Sultán. When the ten days had passed, another ambassador came and asked for ten days more; and as he showed much humility the Sultán again granted the delay but said, "If he fails in his promise this time, I will lay Daulatábád even with the dust, and will up-root its foundations." When he did not again perform his promise, the Sultán was very enraged, and ordered the soldiers to attack the fort on every side, and war with canons and muskets began, and for twenty days there was constant fighting. From the extreme strength of the fort however the chance of victory seemed remote, so the Sultán marched thence towards Bídár. The ministers, that is, the agents of Nizám-ul-mulk of Ahmednagar and Baríd of Bídár and Adil Khán of Bijápur and Khudáwánd Khán Bathri, came to the Sultán's presence with kingly gifts and after offering their tribute stated that it appeared from evidence not to be the case that Nizám-ul-mulk had oppressed Imád-ul-mulk. That Imád-ul-mulk was the first aggressor inasmuch as he began the dispute by seizing the fort of Máhur from the officers of Nizám-ul-mulk, and that it was in consequence of this that Nizám-ul-mulk took his revenge on him. Now they were ready to abide by whatever the Sultán was pleased to order. As in truth this was the case, the Sultán changed his mind about punishing Nizám-ul-mulk and having made peace between him and Imád-ul-mulk of Káwel, he returned towards his own country and arrived at Muhammádábád on the last day of Shaabán A. H. 935 (A. D. 1528). He fixed the salaries and allowances of, and granted picked estates to, and ennobled with rank the numerous Dakhanis who accompanied him and those that followed him, amounting, on their number being ascertained, to about 12,000 horse. In the month of Ramzán he went to Ahmedábád to visit the shrines of his ancestors, and then went to Cambay, and inspected the new ships he had ordered to be built, and leaving that place on the Ramazán Íd he went to Muhammadábád. In the month of Shawwál, he entertained and consoled Jám Firúz, King of Sindh, who had been defeated by the Mughals, and had sought refuge with the Sultán, and promised that he would restore his country to him. At this time Narsingh Deva, nephew of Nársingh Rájá of Gwalior, came to the Sultán with an army of Rájputs. The Sultán gave him service and an estate. Prathiráj, brother of Ráná Sāngá, also came to the Sultán and became enrolled among the vassals of the Sultán.

Afterwards in the month of Muharram A. H. 936 (A. D. 1529) Jaáfar Khán,¹ son of Imád-ul-mulk-Káweli, brought and submitted the petition of his father, stating that Nizám-ul-mulk had not acted according to his promise, and had neither restored his elephants, nor relinquished the town of Bathri which he took from him with its villages. If, said he, the sun of Bahádur Sháh's presence once more rose in the Dakhan, his object would be accomplished. The Sultán ordered the military officers and paymasters to assemble the army for an expedition against the Dakhan. On the 2nd of Muharram A. H. 936 (A. D. 1529), having marched from the great city of Muhammadábád, he encamped at Dabhoi on his way to the Dakhan, and thence marched on to Dháravli where Muhammad Khán Asíri came and met him. When he had advanced a few marches Imád-ul-mulk-Káweli also came and joined him. When the light of the sun of Bahádur Sháh fell on the fort of Muler, Baharji Rájá of Baglánú was admitted to the honour of kissing the carpet. The Sultán showed him much kindness, and gave him two magnificent ruby ear-rings. Baharji, by way of showing his loyalty, gave one of his sisters in marriage to the Sultán, and the next day at the Sultán's desire, he married another of his sisters to Muhammad Khán Asíri and the Sultán marched thence. When he passed the Baglánú frontier, and entered the confines of the Dakhan, he bestowed on Baharji the title of Bahr Khán, and sent him against the port of Chaul with orders to ravage and plunder that country. After that he pressed on by forced marches to Ahmednagar.

¹ Farishtah II. 427 says that this was Khizr Khán, the son of Alá-ud-din Imád Sháh.

The Dhakhanis left the city and fled before the arrival of the Sultán. The Sultán ordered the principal buildings of the city to be levelled to the ground, and the gardens to be laid low. He halted there twelve days, and marched to the Bálághát, and thence sent Mujáhid Khán against the city of Áosá.¹ At this time Imád-ul-mulk said that there was a city in the territories of Khwájah Jahán, called Parinda, which was very prosperous and the greater part of the inhabitants thereof wealthy. The Sultan sent Malik Amín against that city. The Malik went off at once, and plundered Parinda and much property, and countless gold fell into the hands of the soldiery.

It was now reported that Nizám-ul-mulk Bahri, Baríd, Khwájah Jahán, and Khudáwand Khán had united their forces, and with a large army had marched against Asir and Burhánpur. Immediately on hearing this, the Sultán sent Kaisar Khán with a powerful force in pursuit of them. Next day he sent Muhanmad Khán Asíri also to join Kaisar Khán with an invincible army and elephants like mountains. This army met the confederate forces of the Dakhan nobles in the country of Burhánpur and a great battle was fought. When the scales of the battle were equal the brave men of Bahádur Sháh's army called out, "Sultán Bahádur is coming." Immediately on hearing the name of the Sultán, the Dakhanis fled and dispersed and the army of the Sultán returned victorious and triumphant.

After the day of the battle, Baríd, ruler of Bídár, made peace with Imád-ul-mulk. Imád-ul-mulk asked for the hand of Baríd's daughter, and they made peace with each other. Imád-ul-mulk begged the Sultán to forgive Baríd, and the Sultán overlooked his fault. Baríd agreed to have the public prayers read and the coin struck in the name of the Sultán, and the Friday sermon was read in Sultán Bahádur's name in most of the cities of the Dakhan. The Sultán marched from Bír to the town of Bathri, and the Dakhan army entrenched themselves in the fort of Bathri. The Sultán ordered the army to be besieged. For some days battle and conflict raged. In the end, the Sultán left Imád-ul-mulk of Káwel there, with Alif Khán to help him and himself returned to his own country. On the last day of the month of Shaábán A. H. 936 (A. D. 1531), the Sultán with some of his chief followers reached by forced marches the great city of Muhammadábád, and on the 12th of the same month his camp arrived after him. He spent the rainy season in pleasure and enjoyment in his own capital.¹

¹ This seems to be a mistake. Farishtah II. 428 says that Bahádur Sháh sent his officers from the Bálághát to reduce the fort of Daulatábád.

At the commencement of A. H. 937 (A. D. 1529), the Sultán ordered an expedition to be organized to conquer Wághar. When he arrived at Khánpur on the river Mahí, he ordered Khán Aázam, Ása Khán, and Vazír Khudáwánd Khán to march against Wághar. The Sultán himself with a part of the army went to Cambay and Dív, and on the 20th of the month of Muharram he arrived at Cambay, and embarking thence on boardship he arrived at Dív, and purchased on account of Government all the piece-goods and stuffs which had arrived in the foreign vessels. They say that among that merchandise, besides other articles, there were one thousand three hundred maunds (about lbs. 58485)² of rose-water imported by the Turks. The Sultán showed great kindness to the Turks who had come with Mustafa the Turk, and he assinged them Dív as a place of residence, and having entrusted Dív to the charge of Málik Túghá, the son of Ayáz, he returned to Cambay and arrived there on the 5th of the month of Safar, and halting there for one day, set out for Muhammadábád, and on the 27th of that month arrived in that city. Fatch Khán, Kutb Khán, and Ūmar Khán, Afgháns of the Lodi tribe, and relations of Sultán Bahlúl, who, flying from the Mughals, had taken shelter in Gujarát, were admitted to an audience. On the first day three hundred coats embroidered with gold and fifty-five horses and some lákhs of Tánkás were given them as presents. After this the Sultán went towards Wághar, and joined his camp near Morásá, and thence by forced marches reached the country of Wághar. Prathiráj, Rájá of Dúngarpúr, coming to Sambal, obtained the honour of kissing his feet, and the son of the abovementioned Rájá, adopted the faith of Islám. Leaving his camp in this place, the Sultán went to hunt alone in the direction of Bónswálá, and hunted as far as Karji Ghát (east of the town of Bónswara). In this camp Dúngarsi and Jájarsi, the emissaries of Rájá Ratansi, the Rájá of Jeypur, came and kissed the Sultan's feet and presented tribute. After this the Sultán returned to his camp, and bestowed Sambal on the new Musalmán, the son of Prathiráj, and gave one-half of Wágghar to Prathiráj, and the other half to Changá.

¹ Farishtah II. 328 says that the Gujarát Sultán was, to some extent, forced to leave the Dakhan. The Dakhan army by occupying the passes had stopped the supplies reaching the Gujarát camp and a famine began to be dreaded. In the meantime Nizáim Sháh agreed to give up the elephants, &c., captured from Mirán Muhammad Sháh, and as the rains were near Bahádur left for Gujarát.

² A Gujarát maund is forty seers of forty tolas the seer.

They say that while in this place, one day the Sultán went out tiger hunting. A furious tiger appeared. The Sultán made a signal to Álam Khán. Álam Khán, with great bravery, attacked the tiger and slew him, but was also himself wounded. After four days Álam Khán died leaving four sons, Safdar Khán and three others. The Sultán conferred the estates of Álam Khán on his sons, and treated them very kindly. At this camp the agents of Rájá Ratansi petitioned that Sharzah Khán, with the son of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji, had ravaged the Ráná's country. The Ráná also hearing this, ravaged and plundered the village of Sambal, a dependency of Málwá, near the city of Sárangpur, and that the Ráná was then engaged in fighting with Sultán Mehmúd Khilji near Ujjain. At this time news came that Sultán Mehmúd desired to slay Sikandar Khán, ruler of the country of Sinwás and Silahdi (ruler of Rácesen). That both of them had fled to the Ráná, and that Sikandar Khán and Bhúpat Rái, son of Silahdi, were coming to Sultán Bahádur's presence. On the 27th of Jamádu-l-awwal both of them arrived, and were admitted to the honour of kissing the Sultán's feet and explaining their circumstances. At this moment Darya Khán and Kuraishi Khán, the agents of Sultán Mehmúd, having arrived and represented that Sultán Mehmúd Khilji desired a meeting and was only awaiting the orders of the Sultán to approach him. The Sultán said, "Sultán Mehmúd has often written that he was coming, but has never come. Should he come it will be a cause of pleasure to both sides. I am now about to proceed by way of the Karji Ghát. Let him also come that way." The agents hereupon returned.

In short, on the day the Sultán passed the Karji Ghát, Ráná Ratansi and Silahdi came and were admitted to the honour of an interview, and thirty elephants and many horses and one thousand and five hundred handsome gold embroidered coats were bestowed on them both. After a few days Ráná Ratansi took his leave and returned to his capital, and Sikandar Khán and Silahdi and Dalpat Rái and the Rájá of Idár and the Rájá of Wágghar and Dúngarsi and Jájarsi, the agents of Ráná Ratansi, all went in the retinue of the Sultán.

The Sultán said: "Sultán Mehmúd Khilji is also going to Sambal, so let us go there. We shall meet him there and come away." Muhammad Khán Asfri also was with him. The author of the Tárikh-

i-Bahádur Sháhí writes that he was present with the Sultán in this expedition, and that what he has written is from personal knowledge. When the Sultán came to the village of Sambal, he was in daily expectation of the arrival of Sultán Mehmúd. At that time an ambassador of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji came, and represented that Sultán Mehmúd had broken his arm by a fall from his horse while hunting in the country of Sanwás, and that his arrival would, in consequence, be delayed for some days. The Sultán said: "I will go to Mándu to enquire after his health, and there I will also see some one else." The ambassador then said that with regard to the demand of the Sultán for the surrender of Chánd Khán¹ from Sultán Mehmúd that Sultán Mehmúd said that he considered Chánd Khán, the son of his sovereign who had taken shelter with him, and he could not commit such a base act as to hand him over. Sultán Bahádur said, "I do not want the surrender of Chánd Khán from Sultán Mehmúd, but tell him he should come." The ambassador returned, and the Sultán marching came to Dibálpur. News now came that Sultán Mehmúd had given his elder son the title of Sultán Ghiásuddín and sent him to Mándu to entrench himself within the fort of Mándu, intending himself to remain outside and ravage the country, thus refusing to perform his promise. This circumstance greatly enraged the Sultán. Shortly after this Fateh Khán Shirwáni and Álam Khán, nobles of Sultán Mehmúd, deserted their master, and joined Sultán Bahádur, and incited him to take Mándu. When the Sultán arrived at Dhár Sharzah Khán also came over to him from the fortress of Mándu. He said that Sultán Mehmúd wanted to kill him, and that he only saw his safety in flight, and had come under Sultán Bahádur's protection. The Sultán consoled him, and moved thence to the village of Diláwarah² and thence came and encamped at Naálchah. He appointed Muhammad Khán Asiri to erect his batteries at Sháhpur, which is on the west of the fort, and Alif Khán to command the batteries at Bahlálpur, and the batteries of the Hindus who had accompanied him in this expedition, were placed at Bahlwára or Bhálwárah. He himself with joy and good fortune, making a short march, alighted on the 20th of Rajab at Mehmúdpúr. Satisfactory arrangements for the blockade and siege of the fort were now completed and the brave men of both sides commenced to fight, and cannon and muskets were fired on both sides. Some time passed thus.

¹ This Chand Khán was the refugee half brother of Sultán Bahádur who first caused ill-feeling between Bahádur Sháh and Mehmúd II. of Máliwa, and who after the conquest of Mandu by Bahádur, betook himself to Goa and caused the breach between Bahádur and the Portuguese, which ultimately led to Bahádur's assassination.

² A village named probably after Diláwar Khán Ghori (A. D. 1397-1405) fourteen miles north-west of Mándu.

One day the Sultán sent brave and fearless men to reconnoitre the fort and see on which side the heights surrounding it were most lofty. After examination they reported that on the side of Songad-Chittauri the height is the greatest. The Sultán said, "If God wills, I will scale the fort on that side." Men in astonishment said, "This is the steepest of all ascents to the fort; how will it be possible for the Sultán to succeed by that route?" On the 29th of the month of Shaâbân, the Sultán consulted with the Khán Khánán and some other of his special associates, and mounting early in the night went towards Songad-Chittauri. The main body of the army were ignorant of this enterprise of the Sultán. They say that as the Songad-Chittauri side of the fortress was very lofty, and ascent by that way very precipitous, the garrison convinced of the security of that side were careless of defence. The brave men of Bahádur Shah's army ascended the fortress on that side during the night, and in the morning shouting 'Alláh! Alláh!' attacked the garrison in the courtyard of the fort and cried out that Sultán Bahádur had come. Immediately on hearing the name of Sultán Bahádur, the garrison fled. Sultán Bahádur with a body of his men scaled the citadel walls of Songad-Chittauri. When the army of Bahádur Sháh witnessed this they swarmed up like ants and locusts to occupy the fort. Habib Khán, who was one of Sultán Mehmúd's most distinguished nobles, commenced to fight, but was repulsed in the first assault. Sultán Mehmud with many elephants hastened to support him. But when he saw the regal umbrella of Sultán Bahádur he was unable to oppose him, and fleeing with 1,000 horsemen took shelter in his palace. For one hour the hand of slaughter and capture remained high. After that quarter and amnesty were proclaimed. This happened on the 29th of Shaâbân A. H. 937 (A. D. 1529-30).

Sultán Mehmúd was besieged in his palace and saw that the only means of escape was by begging favour and forgiveness. So coming with his seven sons, he paid his respects to the Sultán. The Sultán entrusted Sultán Mehmúd and his sons to confidential keepers. On the 12th of the month of Muharram (H. 938 A.D. 1530-31) the Sultán made over the custody of Sultán Mehmúd and his sons to Alif Khán, Ikbál Khán and Ásaf Khán with orders to take them to Gujarát. When the abovementioned nobles arrived with them near Dohad, which is on the Gujarát frontier Ráisingh Rájá of Pál with his Kolis fell upon them with the intention of rescuing Sultán Mehmúd from their hands. The guards who were at that time round the Sultán's palanquin slew him in the tumult, and carrying his sons to Muhammadábád, confined them there.

All the country of Mándu fell into the hands of the Sultán Bahádúr who showed kindness to the nobles of Mándu, and continued their estates to them. He appointed Malik Kálu, sister's son of Alif Khán their chief, and made him the military commander for the country to guard and protect it and strive in its prosperity.

On the 12th of Shawwál of the above year, i.e., A. H. 938 (A. D. 1530-31) news arrived from Gujarát that Mán Singh, Rájá of Jhálúwár, which is a portion of the districts of Gujarát, comprising the town of Virangám, Mándal, Wadhván, and others, had made an incursion and fought with Sháh Jíva, son of Sheikhan Saláhdár, and had slain Sháh Jíva. The Sultán ordered the Khán Khánán, as Jhálúwár was under him, and as Mán Singh had rendered himself liable to severe chastisement, to consider himself responsible for reprisal and to proceed to Gujarát. The Khán Khánán agreeably to the exalted order set out for Gujarát. On the 9th of the above month Muhammad Khán Asrí obtained leave, and in the month of Zilhajj, Salahdi also took leave to depart for Ráisen which was his residence. The rainy season now setting in, the Sultán with happiness and satisfaction spent it in the fort of Mándu, and at the close of the rains on the 9th of the month of Safar A. H. 938 (A. D. 1531), went in the direction of Burhánpur and Asrí. When he reached Burhánpur, Sháh Táhir Dakhani, who was the most distinguished man of the Dakhan in poetry, and the elegant arts came on the part of Nizám-ul-mulk to the Sultán. At that time in the court of the Gujarát Sultán also, there were men of as high intellectual attainments as Sháh Táhir, like Sháh Mír, Sháh Kamáluddín Asláf and Sháh Abú Turáb, who possessed the privilege of seats in the Sultán's presence. Sháh Táhir also wished to be permitted the honour of a seat in the Sultán's presence. The Sultán through his ministers and companions agreed to this on condition, that on the occasion of his first entry into the royal presence he should deliver the message of Nizám-ul-mulk standing, after which he was to take his seat; and Sháh Táhir did so.

The drift of the message brought by Sháh Táhir was that Nizám-ul-mulk was desirous of the title of Nizám Sháh. If granted this title, would always accept the Gujarát Sultan's overlordship and would remain ever ready to render him liege-service. On the delivery of this message the Sultán said, "If Nizám-ul-mulk is to be called Nizám Sháh, what difference would there be between him and me?" Sháh Táhir said, "There will still be a great difference; up to this moment Bahádur Sháh has been the king of nobles, but now he will be known as king of kings." The Sultán was pleased at this speech, and approved of Sháh Táhir's endeavours, and bestowed on Nizám-ul-mulk the regal umbrella, and from that day whoever sat on the throne of Ahmednagar was styled Nizám Sháh.

It is said that when Sháh Táhir was admitted to the honour of kissing the carpet, some merchants of Khurásán, who used to trade in Gujarát, asked him to speak in their behalf to Malik Túghá bin Ayáz, who was a slave of the Sultán, and the Mir Bahr or lord high admiral of the Gujarát ports, to be pleased to remit the customs dues amounting to Rs. 30,000 on the goods imported by them. The Sháh said, "He is a haughty slave, and I do not like to go to him." The merchants said, "If by your once going to him and by one word of yours, our object can be attained, to delay would be far from generous." The Sháh reluctantly went to his house. The Malik without getting up to receive the Sháh made him a signal to sit down. The Sháh saw in his appearance great haughtiness and dignity, but he interceded for the merchants in a standing posture. The Malik having granted his prayer said: "I will remit their customs duty now and also hereafter, so that whenever in the future they bring any merchandise no one shall annoy them." He also gave the Sháh Rs. 60,000 as a present with many valuable pearls, each of which was considered by pearl merchants fit for a king's ransom. They say that when the news of this meeting reached the Sultán, he was angered with Malik Túghá, and said, "Oh ill-fated one, why did you not get up to receive Sháh Táhir." He replied, "Since that rebellious slave Nizám-ul-mulk does not rise for him, I, who am a loyal slave of my master, why should I get up to receive him?" The application of the word 'rebellious' to Nizám-ul-mulk was in allusion to the circumstance that Nizám-ul-mulk and his ancestors were slaves of Mahmúd Bahmani, and had, by usurpation and violence, attained to royal rank.

To resume, afterwards Nizám-ul-mulk came and met the Sultán. The Sultán received him with kindness, and bestowed on him the title of Sháh. At this time he also bestowed on Muhammad Khán Asíri the title of Muhammad Sháh, and he himself returned to Mándu, and thence sent Malik Amín to Ráisen to fetch Silahdi. Although the Malik persuaded him much, Silahdi was unwilling to come. The Malik wrote to the king, that although he had given him thirty millions of tánkás as a present and bestowed on him a city like Ujjain and the district of Ashta, and the estates of Bhílsah and besides these, elephants and horses such as he had never seen before, yet Silahdi was behaving traitorously and was not willing to come. He moreover entertained thoughts of flying to Mewar. It was finally stated that this accursed one in fact deserved death since he had wrested Muslim women from their husbands and had kept them in his house as concubines. On hearing this the flame of rage was lighted in the Sultán's bosom, and he ordered Mukbil Khán, brother of the Vazír Ikhtiyár Khán, who was an administrator as clever and wise as the famous Persian minister Amír Ali Sher and to whom the rule of the capital was entrusted, to go by forced marches to Muhammadabad, and start off thence with an army and treasure to Sultán Bahádur's camp in Málwa. The Sultán himself encamped at Naálchah, and, by way of stratagem, gave out that he was going to Gujarát lest Silahdi should awake from his dormouse sleep and becoming aware of the destination of the Sultán's expedition flee the country.

COUPLET.

"When Alexander the Great had to lead an army against the eastern nations
He used to pitch his tents facing the west."

Bhúpat Rái, the son of Silahdi, who was in the presence of the Sultán, suspected the real design of the Sultán and mortally afraid of the Sultán's anger, petitioned for leave to bring Silahdi. The Sultán gave him leave, and leaving his army at Naálchah, went himself alone towards Dibálpur to hunt. Silahdi made certain that the Sultán was going to Gujarát. He thought he would go to see the Sultán and would obtain presents from him, and leaving his son in Ujjain, he came to kiss the Sultán's feet. Malik Amín Nas said: "When Silahdi became assured that the Sultán was going to Gujarát, and I promised to get him from the Sultán one hundred thousand gold tánkás and the revenues of Cambay with a hundred Arab horses, it was only then that he started; had it not been so he would never have set out to come to the Sultán." The Sultán said, "This wretch keeps Muhammadan women in his house, and by the holy Law of the Prophet he deserves death. I will never let him go alive unless he becomes a Musalmán." Then marching from Naálchah he came to Dhár, and on the 20th of Rabí-ul-Akhir of the above year A. H. 938 (A. D. 1531). Ikhtiyár Khán with a numerous army, a train of artillery and much treasure arrived at Naálchah and was admitted to the honour of kissing the Sultán's feet, and on the 17th of Jamádul-awwal Silahdi and two of his men were imprisoned in one of the palaces of Naálchah. The army of Silahdi went to his son at Ujjain, and his camp was plundered by the people and the army and some few of his men killed and they brought all his elephants to the Sultán. At the sunset of that same day Imád-ul-mulk was sent against the son of Silahdi, and at the first watch on the night of the 17th of the above month the Sultán marched for Ujjain. When he reached Saádalpur, he ordered Khudá-wand Khán to bring the camp after him and himself pressing on, reached Ujjain. Imád-ul-mulk accompanied the Sultán and represented that the son of Silahdi had fled, before the arrival of the army at Ujjain. On the 18th of that month the district of Ashta, which originally belonged to Hasan Khán of Mándu, was restored to him, and Ujjain was given in fief to Daryá Khán of Mándu. The Sultán marching rapidly came to Sárangpur, and halted there for two days until his camp overtook him. He gave the estate of Sárangpur to Mallú Khán as he, from the commencement of the Sultán's rule, had been in his service.

Afterwards he went towards Bhílsa which country had been converted to Islám by Sultán Shamsud-dín (Altamsh), king of Dehli. Since eighteen years the estate of Bhílsa had been subject to Silahdi, and the laws of Islám had been changed there for the customs of infidelity. When the Sultán reached the above place, he abrogated the ordinances of infidelity and introduced the laws of Islám, and slew the idolators and threw down their temples. On the 17th of Jamádul Ákhir he marched from Bhílsa and went in the direction of the fort of Ráisen and pitched his tents on the bank of a river which is two kos (four miles) from Ráisen, and leaving that camp also on the 18th, he encamped near a masonry tank close to the fort of Ráisen. At this moment an army was seen issuing from the fort. The Sultán mounted with a few chosen men and before the news of his having done so reached his army, he attacked the enemy, and it is said so wielded the sword that he cut those of the enemy he sabered in twain. The unbelievers fled, entered the fort, and the army attacked the fort on all sides, and a war with arrows and muskets and catapults and a fierce cannonade commenced. At sunset the Sultán ordered the belligerents to retire to the camps, vowing destruction to the fort and its occupants with the morning sunrise. In the morning the Sultán appointed his nobles to the charge of the different batteries. Rúmi Khán, who, as an artillery man, was peerless of the age in an instant, threw down a bastion of the fort by his well-directed fire, but the Hindus immediately repaired the breach. The Sultán now sent a thousand of his Dakhani foot with orders to root up a bastion by the foundations, and on every side orders were given to dig mines and fill them with powder and spring them. They say every one performed zealously the duty entrusted to him, and they undermined and threw down the walls making a gap of the length of an arrow's flight. When Silahdi saw this, he besought the Sultán saying he was ready to embrace Islám and give up the fort to the slaves of the Sultán. The Sultán agreed, and Silahdi became a Musalmán, and Lakhman Sen, his brother, who was in the fort, being sent for, also kissed the feet of the Sultán. After this, these two brothers sat in consultation. Lakhman Sen objected to the surrender of the fort, stating that Bhúpat had gone to the Rána and was coming with the Rána's son Bikramájít, at the head of 40,000 horse and countless infantry to their help. That he, Silahdi, had become a Muslim, and that the Sultán would on this account not look upon their project with suspicion, while he, Lakhman Sen would retain the fort until the arrival of the succour. Silahdi was pleased at this proposal, and going to the Sultán, asked leave for the return of Lakhman Sen to the fort, stating that he (Lakhman Sen) would give up the fort to-morrow. The Sultán gave him leave. In the morning they waited six hours for Lakhman Sen's return, but he came not. Silahdi asked orders to go to the foot of the hill and ascertain the cause of his brother's delay. The Sultán sent a troop with him, and he went, but no one came to him from the garrison. Silahdi called out from below:—"Oh! Rájputs, why will you be slain? The Sultán's army will enter by this fallen bastion and kill you one by one." By this he meant indirectly to convey the hint:—You should repair and fortify this place, since this is the place whereby you will meet with your death. He said other words akin to these, and returned. They recounted the facts to the Sultán, and he was moved to great anger. About this time, the youngerson of Silahdi, with 2,000 horse, came and attacked the Sultán's outpost at Parsah or Birsáh. Victory ultimately remained with the Musalmáns. On being defeated, Silahdi's son repaired to Bikramájít and his elder brother Bhúpat.

Some of the chief men of his party were killed, and their heads were brought to the Sultán. At this time a report went round that Silahdi's younger son was slain, and it was his head that was sent to the Sultán. This threw Silahdi into great grief, and the Sultán's anger increased proportionately. He (the Sultán) said to Burhán-ul-mulk, "Had Silahdi not embraced Islám, I would have ordered him to be cut to pieces. Take him for the present to Mándu and keep him in imprisonment there, for we shall want him anon." As the Rána had given an army to Bhúpat and sent his son to his aid, the Sultán sent Muhammed Sháh Asrí and Itimád Khán against the Rána's son, and also appointed another force to be sent against them. They marched quickly, and when they reached the town of Bersiá, news arrived that the son of the Rána was coming with an immense army. Next day, marching constantly, they arrived and encamped at the village of Kherad. Púranmal, son of Silahdi, who, with two thousand horse, was in this village fled without fighting. Imád-ul-mulk from his camp at Bersiá sent to the Sultán an account of the vastness of the Rána's army, and of its approach to aid the victims of the Sultán's wrath. On hearing this the Sultan said, "Though Muhammed Sháh and Imád-ul-mulk have sufficient forces to oppose the Rána, still it would be better if I were present in this engagement. I shall try if Alláh wills to capture these unbelievers alive. So thinking, he left Ikhtiyár Khán in charge of the siege of Ráisen and pressed on seventy kos by forced marches and in one day and night joined the army with thirty horse. The spies of the Rána informed him of this—and not daring to oppose Sultán Bahadur, the Rána retired one day's march from the camp in which he then was, and sent his agents as spies to the Sultán, with a message to the effect that he had heard that the guards who were in charge of Silahdi did not give him food and drink, and were otherwise harsh in their treatment of him. That he had sent his son Bikramájit to entreat the Sultán on his behalf, hoping to produce kindness in the Sultán's mind for him. If the Sultán ordered Bikramájit would seek the (Sultán's) presence. The Sultán said: "Let him come!" The agents returned to the Rána and said they had personally seen the Sultán and his army, and that his (the Rána's) army was no match for it. On hearing this the Rána fled the same night to his country.

At this time, news arrived that Alif Khán with 36,000 horse and cannon and innumerable elephants, had come from Gujarát and was near at hand. The Sultán sent a message to him that the Rána had disappeared like smoke, and that he was pursuing him with a powerful army and with great speed. He also with great haste joined in the pursuit. They say that in one day and night the Sultán traversed seventy kos and arrived at Chittaur. But before his arrival the Rána had entered the fortress. He then resolved to capture this fort after satisfactorily concluding the siege of Ráisen. He returned thence and came to Ráisen when the garrison despairing of succour expressed their readiness to surrender the fort if Silahdi were recalled from Mándu. The Sultán on his part desired to obtain the fort by treaty or surrender wishing to save the Muhammadan women who were believed to be in the fort, and whom he feared the Rájputs would burn alive in the "Juhár" (or ceremony of cremating the women alive) that they would celebrate, if it was taken by storm. In short, he sent for Silahdi from Mándu, in accordance with the request of the besieged. Silahdi came, and taking the Sultán's word for his brother Lakhmansen's safety sent for him from the fort, and he was admitted to the honour of kissing the feet of the Sultán. Then returning to the fort Lakhmansen quietly ordered the greater part of the Rájputs there to descend. He then represented that in Silahdi's zenána there were seven or eight hundred women, chief of whom was his wife Durgá, the mother of Bhúpat.¹ It was her request that he (Silahdi) should go over there and lead back the women below. The Sultán ordered Malik Ali Sher, the son of Kiwámul-mulk, to take Silahdi up and bring him gently back. Malik Ali Sher and Silahdi went up to the fort. The Malik saw that many Rájputs had assembled in the mansion of Silahdi. Silahdi went and sat amongst them in consultation. They asked him what the Sultán intended to give him. He said the Sultán had promised to give him the district of Baroda. They said, "Oh ! Silahdi, thou hast reached the end of thy life, why dost thou lose thy honour ? We have determined that our men should die sword in hand, and that the women should die in the Juhár flames by self-immolation. If you have any shame join us in this design." They then so worked upon his feelings by the relation of the traditions of their clan that Silahdi agreed to their wishes. He called Malik Ali Sher and showed him the grandeur of his house at which the Malik was struck with amaze. He told the Malik how all his wives and women had determined to die in the flames of the Juhár and how he was ashamed to survive them. He requested the Malik to return and say how he had resolved to die with them. The Malik did his best to persuade him, but he would not be shaken in his resolve. When Malik Ali Sher had reached the foot of the hill, the Hindus lighted the Juhár-fire and the men sallied out fighting desperately until they were all killed by the Dakhani and other soldiers who had ascended the fort. They say that the seven hundred wives of Silahdi, and the wives and daughters of the other Rájputs and the daughter of the Rāna, the wife¹ of Bhúpat, the son of Silahdi, threw themselves together into the flames and were reduced to ashes. The casualty on the Muslim side was four killed. Many of the wives and daughters of the Rájputs were captured. This happened in the month of Ramazán A. H. 938 (A. D. 1531). It is related that Durga (the chief wife of Silahdi) forced all the Musalmán women kept by Silahdi to enter the pile, and they were all reduced to ashes except one whom Heaven saved from this Nimrodian holocaust and who came forth alive from the flames. The Sultán bestowed all the ornaments of the burned women on Burhán-ul-mulk Bunyáni, one of the famous nobles, and that nobleman accepted them. His acceptance was much condemned by generous-minded men of the day, who said it was not meet for an honourable man to accept such wealth. But the Malik deemed it lawful prize obtained in war.

¹ According to Farishtah II. 436—37, this heroic lady, the mother, and not the wife, of Bhúpat was the daughter of the Rána Sânga of Chittaur. Farishtah calls her Durgávati.

Reliable people say that when Silahdi was imprisoned and asked to accept Islám, he would on no account agree, and it was with great difficulty that he did himself the honour of entering Islám, and was named Saláh-ud-din. It was ordered that Malik Burhán-ul-mulk Bunyáni, who was unequalled in probity and religious devotion, should attend to the religious instruction of the man and should inculcate on him the principles of the Sacred Law. It is said that when Silahdi first observed the fasts of the month of Ramazán, he was much pleased and said he had never found food and water taste so exquisitely delicious as they did after a fast. He used to say that while yet a Hindu he once asked a Brahman whether there was a way to forgiveness for the innumerable sins and short-comings of which he was guilty. The Brahman said there was none. He then asked a Musalmán Mulla the same question, and the Mulla said there certainly was hope of forgiveness for the worst of sinners, but the Mulla said he was afraid to say by what we could get salvation. Silahdi said that when he assured the ulla of his safety, he said that if a sinner entered Islám with a truly penitent heart he would become as pure as a babe new-born. He said he was really inclined towards Islám in the fullest sense of the term from that day. They say that there were in his possession such vessels and clothes and perfumes and things as were hardly owned by any other king of the period. He had four troupes of dancing-girls, each of whom was peerless in her own particular art. At the time when these women gave their performances forty of them used to stand holding lamps. Each one of these forty had two servants, one of whom held betel leaves and the other scented oil (to feed the lamps). These serving women also were decked with jewels and cloth of gold and other ornaments. The wise men of the period used to verify in the luxury of Silahdi the saying of the Prophet (on whom be peace): "The world is a paradise for unbelievers and a prison for true believers." The saying most appropriately applied to Silahdi. After the conquest of Ráisen, together with all the cities that were under Silahdi's rule, such as the districts of Bhilsah and Chanderi, &c., all these were entrusted to Sultán Alam Lodi, who was a relative of Sultán Sikandar Lodi who, about this time was expelled from Kálpi by Násiruddín Humáyún Padsháh and had taken shelter with the Sultán with ten thousand horse and numerous elephants. The reason of the expulsion of Sultán Alam from Kalpi was as follows:—Mír Nizám-ud-dín Ali Khalifah, the vazír of Bábar Pádsháh, had adopted Sultán Alam as a son and took great interest in his welfare and had given him charge of the district of Kálpi. Some years passed in this way and by the Divine decree Bábar died, and the royal authority passed from his hands to those of his son by Divine ordinance. The idea of rebellion now entered the mind of Sultán Alam. When information of this reached Humáyún, he ordered Hindál Mírza with several other famous nobles to chastise the impossible aspirations of Sultán Alam, who gave battle to the Mírza at the village of Kánpúr in the vicinity of Kálpi, and notwithstanding superiority in numbers, was defeated. After that he came to Sultán Bahádur and entered his service.

¹ See note, preceding page.

After the conquest of Ráisen, Sultán Bahádur ordered Muhammad Sháh Asiri to march against and capture Gágraon (where the Saint Miyán Mítha lies enshrined) and which was taken by the Rána from Sultán Mehmúd Khilji. The Sultán himself went to Gondwánah to hunt elephants. He caught many elephants and in one day captured the fort of Kánúr—which, during the reign of Sultán Násir-ud-dín, Emperor of Dehli (A.D. 1316—1320) had gone into the hands of the Hindus, and which Silahdi also had often tried to subdue without success. He entrusted it to Alif Khán, and having subdued Islámábád, Hushangábád, and other territories of Málwa which were subordinate to those parts, and which had again passed into the hands of the local chiefs, he returned to the town of Sárangpur. He then went to the town of Akru, whence he went to Gágraon. This fort had held up to the time of the Sultán's arrival, but immediately on the Sultán's going, it gave in. The Sultán encamped four days in the neighbourhood of Gagraon and sent Malik Imád-ul-mulk from this place to Mandesúr, and after some days appointed Vazír Ikhtiár Khán also with Muhammad Sháh Asiri to that place. The Sultán himself returned to Mándu. Immediately on Imád-ul-mulk's going, Naku, the agent of the Rána, left Mandesúr, and Imád-ul-mulk took Mandesúr in the month of Shawwál. At this time the monsoons set in, and Muhammad Sháh, Ikhtiár Khán and Imád-ul-mulk having left Pír, the son of I'záz-ul-mulk, with a strong force at Mandesúr, left for Mándu which they reached in the month of Zilkaâd and obtained the honor of kissing the royal feet. Muhammad Sháh now took leave for Asir and the Sultán departed for his capital, and on the 16th of the month of Safar arrived at Muhammadábád. After a few days, news came that the Firangis, with many ships, were coming to take Dív.¹ Immediately on hearing this the Sultán made a forced march and arrived at Cambay in one night. On hearing the news of the Sultán's arrival the Firangis fled, and the Sultán visited Dív and sent the great Egyptian cannon brought by Rúmi Khán with a hundred other pieces of ordnance, with the intention of the conquest of Chittaur to Muhammadábád. They say that besides many bullocks that they used to harness to this gun, 300 sailors used to be required to drag it along, and then only could it move.

After this the Sultán came to Cambay and from there to Ahmedábád to visit the shrines of his ancestors and went to visit the tomb of his Saint Sheikhji, the grandson of Kutb-ul-aktáb, at Batwah. Here he enlisted several thousand new men and made a large collection of arms and sent them on to Mándu, and sent an order to Muhammad Sháh Asíri to start from Asír to join in the conquest of Chittaur. He ordered Vazír Khudáwand Khán with the army in Mándu to join Muhammad Sháh. When the artillery and arms had reached Mándu the Sultán on the 17th Rabí-ul-ákhir started by forced marches for Mándu and reached that city on the third day, and ordered Muhammad Sháh Asíri and Khudáwand Khán to march on to Chittaur. When the abovementioned persons reached Mandesúr, the Rána's emissaries came and petitioned that the Rána was willing to cede such portions of Málwa as were in his possession, to subscribe to any terms the Sultán might see fit to impose and further to acknowledge the suzerainty of the Sultán and perform any service demanded of him. Muhammad Sháh sent Shujáát Khán to the Sultán to submit the petition of the Rána. The Sultán being excessively displeased at the reprehensible conduct of the Rána in coming to the aid of Silahdi, had made up his mind to conquer Chittaur and the petition of the Rána was not granted. Muhammad Sháh and Khudáwand Khán were instructed to order Tátár Khán, the son of Aláuddín, the son of Sultán Behlúl Lodi, to push on with a large body of Gujarátis, and take the initiative in laying siege to Chittaur, and to follow Tátár Khán with all the pieces of ordnance in their train. On getting the order Tátár Khán, taking the Gujarát army, pushed on to Chittaur. The historian of The Bahádur Sháhi says that he also was with the army. Tátár Khán expected that the Rána who had a large army would certainly give battle, but the Rána did not dare to take the offensive. On the 14th Rajjab A. H. 939 (A. D. 1532) Tátár Khán conquered and pillaged the lower portion of the fortifications. Next day he directed his attack to the portion called the Kotháh, and took it also carrying two out of the seven gates of the fort of Chittaur, and wrote his despatches to the Sultán. On the eighth day Muhammad Sháh and Khudáwand Khán arrived with the great cannon and artillery and besieged the fort on all four sides. After that the Sultán making a forced march pressed on at the head of 5,000 horse in one day and night from Mándu to Chittaur, and the army like a line of ants or a swarm of locusts poured in after him. The Sultán, ascending the hill of Chittaur, ordered the cannon to be brought up that they might be able thence to batter down the walls of the fort of Chittaur. At each discharge of the guns great masses of the masonry of the walls went rolling, and whole streets went crumbling down. They say that the Sultán took personally such great pains in the siege of Chittaur as exceeded the endeavours of even private soldiers. He appointed Alif Khán to the battery on the side of the Lakhota gate, Tátár Khán and Medáni Rái and most of the Afgháns to the batteries against the Hanúmán gate, and he entrusted the White Bastion to Mallú Khán and Sikandar Khán and several Málwa nobles and Dakhan soldiers, and placed Bhúpatrái and Alif Khán in another quarter.

¹ This seems to have been the formidable expedition of 400 vessels and 15,600 men collected by the Portuguese Viceroy Nuno da Cunha at Bombay, which was repulsed off Dív on the 17th February 1531. Briggs' Muhammadian Power in India, IV. 132.

The author of the Bahádur Sháhi states that in this expedition the Sultán had such a strong armament and munitions of war so ample as would have sufficed for the simultaneous siege of four forts like Chittaur with the certainty of success.

In short he laid siege to the fort and sent parties on all sides to ravage the territories of the Rána.

They say that the scientific abilities displayed by Rúmi Khán in the siege of Chittaur were unparailelled. His conveying his guns up lofty hills opposite the fort, his adjusting of their aims, his mining and running up of approaches so quickly was such as simply to render the besieged helpless.

When the walls of Chittaur began to show breaches from the cannonade on all sides, the garrison perceived that the fort would soon be conquered. The mother of Vikramájit, who was the chief wife of the late Rána Sánga, sent emissaries and submitted that her son was an old servant of the Sultán, and that he used to remain in Gujarát in the Sultán's service. The old lady also stated with great humility that the Sultán should overlook his fault, and by pardoning him grant her a new lease of life. That he would ever after remain in his service and never disobey his commands, considering the vassalage an honour. That he would cede all that portion of Málwa which was conquered from Sultán Mehmúd Khilji, and give the Sultán as tribute the gold waistband, and crown and cap belonging to Sultán Mehmúd Khilji, together with several jewels of which jewellers were unable to compute the value, which had fallen into the hands of the Rána on the day of the defeat of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji. Besides these valuable stones, the Rána agreed to give ten millions of tánkahs, a hundred horses and ten elephants.

As this petition from the mother of Vikramájit was reasonable, the Sultán agreed to it, and taking this tribute, on the 27th of Shaában retired from Chittaur and halted a kos thence, and sent Burhán-ul-mulk and Mujáhid Khán with a strong army to conquer the fort of Ranthambor, and the towns under it. He sent Malik Shamsheer with twelve nobles against the fort of Ajmere, and himself on the 5th of the holy month of Ramazán, marched in the direction of Mandisár, arriving in the town on the fourth day. Halting there one day, on the 10th of the above month, he started off the camp for Mándu, and after two days making a forced march and travelling eighty miles in one day and night he reached Mándu, and on the 18th of that month, his camp followed him. The Sultán sojourned some time in Mándu in happiness and enjoyment. After some time he sent Muhammad Sháh Fárúki, with several celebrated nobles of Gujarát, against Nizám-ul-mulk Dakhni, with instructions to in co-operation with Imádul-mulk Kâwili, expel Nizám-ul-mulk from his country and obtain possession of it. Should he offer resistance, they were to stay and send for the Sultán, and he would hasten to them and capture this artful foe alive. Muhammad Sháh started. When he arrived at the village of Bír, Nizám-ul-mulk and Malik Baríd with a large army opposed him. Muhammad Sháh sent this information by swift couriers to the Sultán. Immediately on getting it the Sultán mounted a horse named "Kúchak," or the Little, who in fleetness equalled the wind, and with 12,000 picked horsemen from his powerful army set out with speed. He arrived at Bír, in time to see the two armies drawn up against each other in line of battle with rock-like elephants in front, firing at each other. At this time the sound of the drums of the advanced guard of the Sultán's army reached the combatants. The Gujarátis began to hail one another, proclaiming the arrival of their Sultán. As soon as the Dakhnis heard this, they fled, many of them falling victims to the destroying sword and spear of the Gujarát warriors. Of the nobles of the Sultán's army the sons of Darya Khán Bádhel fell wounded in the field. They were taken up alive, and the Sultán showed them great kindness, and gave the eldest the titles of his father and doubled his wealth and estates, and said: "Whoever wishes to obtain the titles of his father, let him obtain them as these boys have done."

In short, after some days Nizám-ul-mulk came and saw the Sultán and wore the ear-ring of submission. His territories were made over to him and he remained in Sultán Bahádur's retinue for some marches before he took leave.

The desire of conquering Chittaur again took possession of the Sultán's heart. About this time Muhammad Zamán Mírza grandson of Sultán Husein Mírza Bábakra, King of Khurásán, who had married Maásúmah Begam, one of the daughters of the emperor Bábar, and sister of the emperor Humáyún, came and presented himself before Sultán Bahádur. The fact was that this prince being of the blood royal of the house of Timúr had aspirations to the throne, wherefore he was confined in the citadel of Agra by Humáyún. When the emperor Humáyún made his first expedition to the East to subdue Patna, Báyzíd Afghán and Muhammad Zamán Mírza fleeing came and sought shelter with Sultán Bahádur. This sowed the first seed of strife between the Sultán and Humáyún. Then commenced a correspondence between Sultán Bahádur and the emperor Humáyún which had for its object the demand that Muhammad Zamán should not be given refuge.¹ The style of the second letter from Humáyún to Sultán Bahádur is produced here verbatim:—

“After acting upon the laws of thanks to and praise of the Almighty to Whom be glory for His bounties and after laudations to the Prophet on whom be peace be it stated that when Kázi Abdul Kádir and Muhammad Mukím reached this celestial threshold and gave information of the ratification of the agreements and treaties (between our governments) the hope of the restoration of good understanding between ourselves which is the sure source of peace for the good of God’s creatures and the prosperity of towns and cities impressed itself on my mind. It never occurred to me that you would after that transgress the limits of the meaning of (the Quráanic verse) ‘Oh ye true believers perform your promises,’ and set at naught the behest of the Prophet (on whom be peace). ‘Verily the fulfilment of a promise is the best form of faith.’ Whereupon I sent Isláh-ul-mulk Maulána Kásim Ali Sadr and Ghiás-ud-dín Kúrchi with the message that if your Sultánic Majesty are with all that has passed still firm in the old and established usage of amity, it would be proper that you should send to my court that band of men who have chosen the road of baseness to our bounties and have escaped to seek refuge with you, or drive them from your presence and country. It was also desired that you may not in future instigate the servants of this state to follow their example. It was expected that the persons above alluded to would bring back a definite reply from your Majesty to these requests, so that the dust of ill-will should be washed away by the waters of amity and the tree of friendship again bear fruit. When the above-mentioned persons and Núr Muhammad

¹ Here the writer quotes some of the verses of the first and second letters of Humáyún to Sultán Bahádur which are omitted.

Khalíl reached the foot of this lofty throne and delivered the agreement they were charged by you with, the contents of the above agreement did not seem to be as satisfactory as they were hoped to be. This caused great astonishment. You write about Muhammad Zamán Mírza that in spite of such treaties and engagements existing between the former emperors of Dehli and the late Sultán Muzaffar, that Sultán Sikandar, and Sultán Aláuddín and many other Sultáns have come to Gujarát, and have been received and provided for according to their conditions without thereby causing any breach of friendship between the ruler of Gujarát and the emperors of Dehli, and that in the same way if Mírza Muhammad remained with you, and was well received, it does not matter. This is not an argument in point. Let it not be concealed that the only mode of preserving friendship between us is that you concede to my wishes and send these misguided people to the lofty throne or refrain from protecting them, or keeping them in your country. If you act thus your faith will be clear as the sun in middle meridian. You will act thus if your thoughts go in accord with your professions and your acts agree with your words. If not, by what agreement can faith be placed in your treaty. It is probably known to your Sultánic Majesty that the World Conquering Lord (Tamerlane), may God enlighten the glory of his name, had several differences with the Sultán of Rúm, Ildarím Báyzázid (Bajazet), and though many signs of hostility appeared from that ruler, he did not think of laying waste the kingdom of Rúm, because Bajazet was engaged in fighting the Franks. When Fara Yúsuf Turkoman and Sultán Ahned Jaldír fled from fear of the victorious army (of Timúr) and took refuge with Bajazet, the World Conqueror desired Bajazet not to give these men shelter, and intimated to him the advisability of expelling them from his territories. When Báyzázid Ildarím (Bajazet) turned his face from these friendly hints, what Fate had ordained, came about.

COUPLET.

If, in the house of virtue there is any one,
To him from Sa'adi's speech a word is enough (Meaning Verbum sat sapienti.)

What more should I write. Peace on him who followeth the path of rectitude.

THE COMMUNICATION ADDRESSED BY SULTÁN BAHÁDUR TO HUMÁYUN.

After opening the words in the name of the Omniscient King, and perfuming the sense of smell with the praise of peace to and prayers for the Best of the created (that is the Prophet) on whom be peace! be it shown, that, what was sent by the chosen person of the sublime court, Núr Muhammad Khalíl reached this court and obtained the honour of kissing the edge of the carpet, and the letter of wonderful contents, was also delivered and its proud meaning has been understood by this Sultánic Court. It is among other things, written that Kásim Ali and Ghiásuddín were sent to represent to me that the signs of truth and amity would appear, if the refugees to this court were expelled from the guarded dominions of Gujarát. Verily this is a sheer falsehood, for had your Majesty's delegates spoken to me even a word on any subject except the general subject of amity and peace existing between us and of the treaties thereabout, matters would not have reached this crisis—a crisis which has obliged your Majesty to advance as far as Gwáliar. This is a bad idea and crude ambition. It is known to all high and low that your Majesty had entered into strong agreements and stringent treaties with that descendant of a princely house, Sultán Muhammad Mírza, and had strongly ratified them by oaths of friendship and brotherliness. When your Majesty had the upper hand of him you broke the agreements and turned your face from all truth and fidelity and hastened towards hostility and enmity. The prince above alluded to, had heard from the sons of the world, the fame of this house for bestowing thrones and conquering dominions, and had heard how Sultán Mehmúd Khilji after the treachery and tyranny of the Hindus had taken refuge in this court, and how the late Sultán Muzaffar (may Heaven be pleased with him and make paradise his lodging!) had taken up his cause. In the same way I have also given merciful heed to the complaints the Mírza has made of the evils he has had to suffer at the hands of promise-breakers and considering the aid of a Muslim in distress (in the words of the Prophet, on whom be peace, "Help thy brother in distress") incumbent on me, I have thrown on him the shadow of my patronage and protection in the hope that by the favour of Alláh his hopes and my endeavours may bear abundant fruit. Though the constancy of your agreements had become clear and undoubted still in the presence of Kázi Abdul Kádir and Muâtamin-uz-Zamán, of Khurásán, I agreed to an oath on the Kuráán because of the goodness of my own intentions, the purity of my motives and the charity of my thoughts for every Muslim, and I considered that enough and binding. In these days as the necessity of uprooting the foundations of the Firangís appeared pressing I had to go to the port of Div. Your Majesty, immediately on hearing of this, took opportunity to push on as far as Gwáliar dismissing from your mind the Kuráanic precept: "Break not your agreements after their ratification." It was not in the way of keeping agreements that your Majesty ordered the sermon of that place to be read in your name. Your Majesty who have not the grace to offer apologies for such a conduct consider yourself justified in dismissing my apologies unheard. Truly your Majesty's acts, as well as writings, savour of great intrepidity. I suppose your boasting of the exploits of your grand sire seven degrees removed (Tamerlane) is of a piece with it. Had you been able to write of a bit of your own achievements it would have been something. But it seems your Majesty's performances have not reached the stage of being spoken or written about? Probably the putting together of a long stringed narrative was all that your Majesty wished for. It is a pity your Majesty did not think of the smallest of my exploits—if only to edify yourself by taking an example therefrom.

COUPLET.

If thy sword has not the strength fit for prowess
Wield not the sword of thy tongue!

If thou art diminutive in size
Walk not on stilts to appear tall in the eyes of boys.

If thy falchion wants in mettle my boy
Oppose not with it the wielder of a nobler blade.

By the help of God and by His grace it is known to all that as long as the throne (of this country) is graced by the occupation of this Presence (meaning himself) no ruler has had the strength or courage of opposing his powerful armies, whereas, your Majesty are engaged in contest with a low Afghán. Why do you inflict such a headache (as that of thinking of fighting with me) on yourself? According to the (Kuráanic) precept "Let not Satan mislead you" your Majesty should not permit pride to take possession of you. Surely in a few days whatever is the wish of the Creator shall appear.

COUPLET.

The devotees asked for a drink of the water of the Heavenly fountain
Káfusar, and Háfiz demanded a cup of wine,
Let the result show what in respect of each is the wish of the Creator!

They say that the Sultán being illiterate ordered the despatch of this letter just as it was written by Munshi Mulla Mehmúd, without becoming acquainted with its beauties or defects, and so it was sent. It is said that this Mulla was formerly in the service of Humáyún and had, by some act or other, earned his displeasure, which effecting him to some extent he left the service of that monarch and entered that of Sultán Bahádur. This stupid person with these motives wrote the letter which became the cause of kindling this fire of dissension. Every reverse that befell the Sultán was a chip from the pen of this unpolished block and all the misfortunes that came on the Sultán were of the inundation that formed itself from the drippings of his pen.

It is so related by men of gentility that when Mulla Mehmd brought this writing to the Sultán, the Sultán was in intoxication. In that same condition this mischief-making treacherous person read it over to the Sultán, and he, full of trust, without consulting or asking the opinion of any minister, and without considering the merits or demerits of the composition, ordered its despatch. When the nobles and ministers heard of it in the morning and became acquainted with its harsh verbiage, they struck the slap of anxiety on the thigh of pain and represented to the Sultán the above facts. The Sultán was much concerned and ordered Malik Amín Nas, who was companion-vazír, to mount with all speed and recall the couriers despatched with the objectionable communication. He also called Abúji Náýik, who, afterwards, in the time of Sultán Ahmed II. reached the dignity and position of obtaining the title of Wajih-ul-mulk and the vazírship of Gujarát, and told him: "You are of my family (the Táuk-tribe). It is necessary that you should travel with such speed that you reach the Nirúr Pass before the courier does and turn him back." Abúji mounting one of the fleet royal horses started with all the speed he could and arriving at the Pass asked the guards if the courier had passed. They said no couriers had passed till then. So he sat for three nights and days and watched incessantly, but the couriers did not appear and so he concluded they must have passed another way. He, therefore, left the place, and going to Sultán Bahádur related to him what had passed. Every one said nothing could now be done and that what was destined would come to pass.

The Sultán again desired to conquer the fort of Chittaur and entrusted the conduct of the business to Malik Rúmi Khán, promising him the governorship of Chittaur after its conquest. In his arrangements for the conquest of Chittaur Rúmi Khán showed such wonders as the eyes of the world had never seen.

They say when Humáyún saw the letter of Sultán Bahádur, he was much hurt and he started from Agra for Chittaur with his armies. When he raised his victorious standards in the territories of Gwáliar, it occurred to him that if he engaged Sultán Bahádur while that monarch was besieging the fort of Chittaur, the act would be put down as indirectly helping the infidel against the Muslim, besides being contrary to the spirit of Islám. He, therefore, thought it best to await the result of the siege and halted at Gwáliar with these intentions. On hearing of the advance of Humáyún, Sultán Bahádur detached Tátár Khán Lodi with 30,000 well-equipped horse, and veteran soldiers to march upon Delhi, the capital city of India, by way of Biána and subdue that country, so that Humáyún would have to return for the relief of his capital. If Humáyún did not fall back to oppose Tátár Khán, then it was as well if Tátár Khán became master of that country, and collected there a large army. And if Humáyún should come this way Tátár Khán would arrive from the other direction. It was thought that these tactics should at once give the Gujarát army heart, set apart for them a strong reserve-force and cause the dissipation of Humáyún's forces. If Humáyún Pádsháh marched or sent an army against him, Tátár Khán was instructed to entrench himself strongly and await the Sultan's arrival, but in no case to offer fight till the Sultán came to his aid, and that on his part the Sultán would lose no time in going to his help.

They say that when Tátár Khán reached the territories of Biyána, Mírza Hindál, who with 5,000 valiant horsemen, had been despatched by Humáyún to engage him, came and opposed him. Tátár Khán, regardless of the prohibition expressed to him in such exaggerated terms by the Sultán, at once gave battle and was forthwith routed and his army dispersed. Tátár Khán, however, never placed foot outside the field of battle, and, as long as he had life in his body, performed acts of heroic manliness and valour. At last he was killed.

It is said by some authorities that his disobedience of the orders of Sultán Bahádur was due to the hopes he entertained to secure the throne of Dehli for himself, as he also came of a line of kings who had ruled over Delhi. He thought after winning this battle to assemble a large number of Afgháns round his standard, and calculated that after the engagement between Humáyún and Sultán Bahádur it would be easy for him to cope with one or both of the weakened combatants and assume the reins of the dominion of Delhi. This was why he disobeyed the strict injunctions of Sultán Bahádur and gave battle, and by his own treachery came to grief. The responsibility (of the truth or the reverse of this account) is on the head of the narrator.

They say that when the besieged Hindus of Chittaur were straitened, and Sultán Bahádur perceived that the prospect of the conquest of the fort was not remote, he said in a proud, boastful spirit, "Is there any one in this period who can fight with or oppose me?" His Holiness the Maulavi Kázi-Mehmúd Jálándharpuri, who was present, fearlessly repeated the following :

Couplet.

"When no lion remains in a meadow
The lame fox begins to hunt there."

Sultán Bahádur was touched to the quick at these words and said that the Kázi should not remain within the limits of his territories. The Kázi (in the words of the Kuráan) said :— "The earth is God's ; neither of us remain in this country." He moved thence to Vírpúr¹ with the intention of proceeding to the pilgrimage and in the same year A. H. 941 (A. D. 1534) he passed away from this transitory world to the everlasting one. He was the spiritual follower of his father and received the gift of saintliness from his uncle, Kázi Ímád, and was the disciple of the lord Sháh Álam. He had great friendship with Sháh Sheikh Jí, the grandson of Kutbi Álam.

The Sultán was much embarrassed by the defeat of Tátár Khán and the heat of his arrogance and pride was chastened by the cold of misfortune and fear. At this time Chittaur fell. The Sultán wanted to fulfil the promise he had given to Rúmi Khán, but his vazírs advised that if he entrusted such an important place to such a person as Rúmi Khán that he would never obey him, so he changed his mind and did not perform his promise. Rúmi Khán was vexed at this and sent secret messages to

¹ A village on the Bávoli river, eight or nine miles west of Lúnáwádá, in the Revákántha Agency (Bombay Gazette, VI., 170). The Mir-ati Ahmedi (Persian Text II. 81) states that the grave of the saintly Kázi, like the shrine of Sultán Husbang of Mándu, possesses the power of sweating.

Humáyún, stating that if he came soon it would be easy to defeat Sultán Bahádur, as the whole conduct of the war was in his hands and that his advice, if followed by the emperor's army, would make him victorious. So Humáyún turned from Gwáliar to Chittaur. The Sultán asked Rúmi Khán how best to fight with the emperor. He said, "we shall, like the King of Rúm (the Sultán of Turkey), surround ourselves with gun-carriages, and when a large army advances towards us I shall fire my cannon at them, so that if it is a mountain of iron it will turn to ashes." The Sultán acted on the advice of Rúmi Khán, and although the nobles said this mode of warfare would not suit them, the Sultán did not give ear to them. When they entered the ring fence of gun-carriages the courage of the Sultán's soldiers began to cool and the emperor's troops were encouraged. Rúmi Khán then wrote to the emperor that the Sultán was confined by him in the enclosure of gun-carriages and that he should order his soldiers to surround him with orders not to allow any one to go out from within or come in from without. The emperor gave the order and his Mughals formed a cordon round the Sultán's camp and closed the roads, and grain became first scarce then unobtainable, and they began to live on oxen, horses and camels. Several days passed thus, and at last the army of Sultán Bahádur became so straitened that four horses could not feed two men to satisfaction. Clarified butter and such things became as rare as a phoenix. The horses would chew one another's manes and tails and die. The Sultán was bewildered. At this time a chief of the Banjhárús or grain-carriers came and stated that he had brought a hundred thousand bullock loads of grain, but from fear of the Mughal foragers was unable to bring them in without convoy. If this was given him he would bring the grain in and would afterwards bring more. The Sultán secretly told off 5,000 horse for that duty, but Rúmi Khán sent the information overnight to Humáyún with the message, that if this grain reached the entrenched camp, matters would again be prolonged. That monarch sent a strong force to cut off the supplies. The intercepting Mughal force fought with the convoy, which was defeated, and all the grain was carried off to the camp of Sultán Humáyún. On hearing this, the army of the Sultán washed their hands of life. The Sultán had still such confidence in Rúmi Khán that he would not even drink water without consulting him, but now his treachery became evident, and he also coming to know that he was found out, fled and joined Humáyún. This event made the army of Sultán Bahádur quake as if the day of judgment had dawned upon them. They say that one day ten or twenty horsemen from the Mughal camp with a little howdáh elephant in front approached the camp of Sultán Bahádur. A party from the army ran to attack them. The Mughal horsemen ran away without fighting, and the little elephant fell to the hands of the Gujarátis. When they brought the little elephant into the presence of the Sultán, two small boxes were found in the howdáh. All the nobles, ministers and wise men entreated the Sultán not to open the boxes saying, that the troops escorting them had fled away without showing the least fight and had left the elephant, and that this must surely be some ruse, and that therefore the boxes must not be opened. This, however, did not satisfy the Sultán and he insisted on their being opened. They were found to contain a small quantity of salt and some inches of indigo-dyed cloth. When the Sultán and his soldiers saw this (charm) an unaccountable feeling of craven fear took possession of their souls and the sight so scared the Sultán, that when night fell he ordered all the precious stones and rubies and valuables that were in his treasury to be burned, and the trunks of his huge war-elephants—that of all his possessions he held dearest, to be cut off. The eyes of the Sultán and of all those that were present in the assembly filled with tears. And he ordered a pair of immense mortars that he had, one of which was called Leila and the other Majnún, ¹ to be charged with powder and burst. Then he ordered a horse and mounting it, without informing the army with some of his chief followers, turned his face towards Mánda. This happened on the 20th of the month of Ramazán A. H. 941 (A. D. 1534).

On the following morning a great commotion arose in the Sultán's camp. The Sultán having gone away, the army with neither the means of issuing out nor the possibility of remaining, lost heart. At this time, the powerful army of Humáyún came down on them, and the wise men of the army realized the truth of the Kuráanic verse:

"Thou vouchsafest dominion unto whomsoever thou wilt
And taketh it away from whomsoever thou wishest!"

¹ Leilah and Majnún are the Romeo and Juliet of the East. These Arab lovers flourished during the reign of the first Umawi Khalífah, Mu'awiyah (A.D. 661-680; A. H. 41-61).—Translator.

and the meaning of the last hemistich of the Sultán's quotation from Háfiz in the concluding portion of his letter to Humáyún was illustrated. The whole camp of the Sultán was plundered. Many soldiers were killed, some taken prisoners and others escaped with bare heads and feet.

They say that, when Humáyún saw the tent of the Sultán, which was of uncommonly thick velvet down embroidered with gold, he said it was evidently the property of a ruler possessing great maritime power.

It is related that Sultán Sikandar, the son of Behlúl Loði, used often to say that the dependence of the kingdom of Delhi was on wheat and jáwár (Sorghum vulgare) and that the greatness of the income of the Sultánate of Gujarát, which had eighty-four ports under its sway, was due to its revenues from corals and pearls.

The insignificant and humble person who writes this history has heard from his father, that he was one of the chief officers, whose duty it was to remain near the royal person of Humáyún in this expedition. That he was the librarian, and the emperor was ever engaged in reading and that (consequently) his services were always required. On the day the emperor gained the victory, he sat on the throne of pleasure and gave a general audience. All the nobles and soldiers stood with folded arms each in his proper place. A speaking parrot that had been taken in the spoils of Sultán Bahádúr was brought and its cage deposited at the foot of the emperor's lofty throne. Its words excited general astonishment and wonder. They say it was such a speaking parrot that if the famous parrot that figures in the *Túti-Námah*¹ had been then alive, it would have taken instruction from it. In sharpness of understanding, as in clearness of articulation, it was so remarkable that it used to reproduce with exactitude the words spoken by any one in any language. It is related that when the cage of this clever parrot was brought and placed before the emperor, Rúmi Khán was announced and the emperor said: "Let him come." The moment the parrot heard the name of Rúmi Khán, it began to say: "Fie on Rúmi Khán, fie on Rúmi Khán the traitor, fie on Rúmi Khán the traitor." It probably repeated this no less than ten times. Rúmi Khán hung down his head in shame. When Humáyún ascertained the meaning of the words from an interpreter and saw Rúmi Khán ashamed, he said: "Rúmi Khán, if these words had been uttered by a human being, I would have ordered his tongue to be torn out from the back of his neck, but what can I do to an animal without understanding?" The people of the assembly guessed that when Rúmi Khán deserted the Sultán, the people there must have thus reproached him aloud and that the bird had repeated the words of those men now that the name of Rúmi Khán fell on its ears and recurred to its memory. The truth, however, was that God directed these words to fall from the animal for the warning of others in that assembly, for no one else in that assembly would have dared to address words so truthful in respect of Rúmi Khán to him.

¹ The Túti Námah is a famous work of imagination in Persian, wherein a parrot gifted with wonderful wisdom and powers of speech is represented as telling certain edifying stories.—Translator.

To continue, Humáyún started thence and laid siege to Mándu. The Sultán was besieged and again the fire of disturbance and war and conflict was kindled. At this time Rúmi Khán wrote to Bhúpatrái, son of Silehdi, reminding him of the Sultan's cruelty to his family, and stating that it would be foolish of him to give his sweet life for such a tyrant, on the contrary that it was the time for revenge and retaliation. Rúmi Khán suggested that Bhúpat should throw open the gate, that may be entrusted to him, to the followers of the emperor at the time of the attack, and that the emperor had agreed to give him his father's place, and, moreover, do him many other kindnesses. Bhúpatrái, thus misled, opened the gate and took himself aloof, and the army entered the gates and ascended. When the Sultán heard of this, he said: "The saying of the wise: 'to kill the snake and bring up its young ones is not the act of the wise,' is not false. It always brings evil." Having made Malik Ráje his locum tenens and entrusted Songadh, the citadel of Mándu, to Sultán Álam Lodi, he went out by another gate and set out towards Gujarát. Some of the soldiers of Humáyún pursued and overtook him, but he turned back and fought them personally and so wielded the sword that he vanquished his opponents and went on. The fort was conquered. Sadr Khán was captured alive and killed. After this they assaulted the citadel and reduced the garrison to sore straits. Sultán Álam Lodi surrendered to the emperor, who ordered him with three hundred of his followers to be put to death. They say that on Tuesday, Humáyún donned the red garments (in token of royal anger and general massacre) and held a durbar, and ordered general slaughter. In one hour streams of blood flowed in every street and quarter of Mándu.

In the course of the massacre Manjhu, the musician of Sultán Bahádur, was captured by a Turkish Mughal. The Mughal wanted to kill him and had placed his hand on his sword hilt. The musician said: "What will you gain by killing me? Save me, and I will give you my weight in gold. I am a companion of Sultán Bahádur and have no lack of money." The Mughal taking down his turban bound the hands of the musician and sat in a corner. Accidentally, one of the rájás in the following of Humáyún riding by, recognized Manjhú and at once alighting from his horse took Manjhu by the hand and led him along. The Mughal said his sword was drawn and the orders of the emperor were for a general slaughter, and that he would not let Manjhú go alive. As the Rajá also had a large following and the Mughal was alone, he was volens volens dragged along with Manjhú till they reached the emperor's presence. They saw that he was so enraged that sparks of fire flew from his eyes wherever he cast them and except "slaughter" no other words issued from his lips. The Mughal complained: "This is my captive and he is a companion of Bahádur's, and this Hindu has by force brought him here." Khushál Beg Qúrchí, who had been sent on the mission to the Sultán previous to this war, had seen the rank and dignity enjoyed by Manjhú before Bahádur. He said: "Oh! my king, this Manjhú is the prince of singers." The emperor cast a sharp glance at him, but he repeated the same words and said again: "Health to your Majesty! such a musician does not perhaps exist in all Hindustán." The fire of the emperor's rage became extinguished and he ordered him there and then to sing something. Manjhú had not his peer in Persian song also. He sang so well that the mood of the emperor underwent a complete change and the ocean of his mercy began to boil. He at once changed his blood-red garments for green and gave a special reward to Manjhú and told him to ask for something, saying he would give him whatever he asked. Manjhú said: "Most of my companions are taken prisoners: I ask for their release." The emperor bound his royal quiver to the waist-band of Manjhú and gave him his own charger, and sent with him several of his chief men and told them: "Whomsoever Manjhu releases let no one hinder." They say that several people at that time complained to the emperor that Manjhú did not release his own relations only, but was setting free both relations and strangers. The emperor, however, said: "This is a very small matter. Had he asked for my kingdom to-day, I would not have turned my face but would have given it him most readily." Manjhu, it is said, became intimate with the emperor. They say whatever presents he received in the king's service he gave to that Mughal and used to say: "He has spared my life, how can I recompense him." The writer has received this account from his father, who was present in that assembly and who was honoured by holding a place about the person of the emperor. Ultimately, Manjhu fled and joined Sultán Bahádur. The emperor Humáyún used to say that it was Manjhu's misfortune had impelled him to take that step "Else I would have bestowed so much on him that he would never have remembered Sultán Bahádur." They say that when Manjhu reached Sultán Bahádur, the Sultan exclaimed: "To-day I regain whatever I have lost. My meeting with Manjhu has dispelled all my sorrow and rage, and I have no further desire; what I was asking for, my God has given me."

When Sultán Bahádur came from Mándu to Chámpáner, a fort in the kingdom of Gujarát, he left vazír Ikhtiyár Khán and Rája Narsinghdeva who had the title of Khán Jehán in charge, and he himself going by Cambay to Sorath, took up his residence at Div. Humáyún came from Mándu to Gujarát and besieged Chámpáner. The garrison had tried hard to take the large piece of ordnance called the Bahádur Sháhi up to the fort, but had only succeeded in taking it half way up the hill, when the army of Humáyún arrived. So the garrison spiked the mortar in three places and abandoned it. When Rúmi Khan saw it, he said he could repair it, and filled the holes with a mixture of seven metals. It could now take a smaller charge of powder and its range was somewhat reduced; it was nevertheless a scourge of God and a terror. They say that the very first shot that Rúmi Khán fired from it, brought down the gate of the fort, and with the second, he felled a tree standing near the gate. The garrison, on seeing this, began to tremble. Now there was a Firangi in the fort, by the name of Sakta (Mesquita ?)¹ who was made a Musalmán by Sultán Bahádur, with the title of Firang Khán. He said to Ikhtiyár Khán: "What if I fire a ball down the muzzle of that mortar and burst it?" And Ikhtiyár Khán replied: "If you do so, I will enrich you beyond your wants!" Firang Khán in the very first shot so directed the ball into the muzzle of the mortar, as to shatter it to pieces. The people of the fort were delighted. Ikhtiyár Khán gave the Firangi something less (than he had promised), but Rájá Narsinghdeva gave him seven maunds of gold. They say that Rájá Narsinghdeva was left behind in the fort, because he was wounded. On account of the continuous cannonade, both from above and below, his wounds broke out afresh, and he died. When the news of the Rájá's death reached Sultán Bahádur, he said, "Alas! the fortress of Chámpáner is lost!" Afzal Khán Vazír asked: "Has any news to that effect been received?" The Sultán said, "No, but Rájá Narsinghdeva is dead, and I despair of this Mulla (or priest, meaning Ikhtiyár Khán) having the courage to hold the fort!"

¹ Faria-e-Souza (quoted in Briggs' Muhammadian Power in India IV., 135-138) says that Firangi Khán was a Portuguese "apostate" of the name of John de St. Jago, who was in attendance on Sultán Bahádur at the time of that brave king's assassination by the Portuguese at Div.

The favoured of God, Sayad Jalál-ud-dín Bakhári, surnamed Munawwar-ul-mulk, used often to say that the fortress of Chámpáner was such that if an old woman threw stones from above, the bravest men in the world could not take it. Wonderful was the good fortune of Humáyún that he conquered such a fort so easily. And the way in which he won it was this:—One night the besieged sent down two hundred Kolis from the fortress to bring grain, although provisions were so plentiful that they would have sufficed for a ten years' siege. But when good fortune forsakes men almost all their acts prove ruinous mistakes. When the Kolis came below and arrived near the batteries they were all captured and taken before the emperor who ordered them to be killed. When seventy or eighty of them were killed, one of the survivors said: "If you do not slay us, I shall take you up by a way which none of the garrison are aware of." This speech they reported to the emperor, who encouraged them and their chief men and sent some of his brave men of tried valour with them. The Kolis that very night took them up by such a path, as was not only unknown to Humáyún's army, but even to the garrison. As soon as the band arrived, they descended over the battlements of the fortress and with the cries of "Allah! Allah!" fell on the besieged, who were astonished as to whence this calamity had dropped upon them. Some threw themselves over the walls of the fortress, some were slain, and others fleeing with Ikhtiyár Khán took shelter in the citadel known as the Maulia, and the fort was won. This happened on the 7th of the month of Safar, A.H. 942 (about the 8th of August, A.D. 1535). The Mughal army came up and after a while Ikhtiyár Khán also became helpless and begged for quarter, and the second day after the conquest of the fort, went into the presence of Humáyún. Since the Khán was a Mulla (a learned man) of pleasant manners, an astronomer and a poet, and was accomplished in all the arts, his company pleased Humáyún, who became extremely kind and favourable to him.

It is related that one day Sheikh Jamál Kambo who was styled the second Khusrao,¹ and who was the author of the following couplet:—

COUPLET.

Thy courtyard's dust the mantle I have worn,
The streaming tear in hundred rents hath torn.

The poet also was with the emperor in this expedition. He once told the Khán that he had heard he was very proficient in the art of enigmas, and asked him to find his name in the Kuráan. The Khán instantly replied, "Jama á, má lan,"² (i.e., he collected or heaped up wealth.) The Sheikh said: "My name is Jamál." The Khán read out the verse and showed that the numerical value of the letters in the part of the verse he had read out corresponded with that of Jamál and there was great applause.

They say that when once out riding Humáyún sent for Ikhtiyár Khán in a way expressive of great royal condescension. Ikhtiyar Khán failed to acknowledge his sense of the honour done to him in the manner prescribed by the elaborate etiquette of the Mughal Court. Those present showed an inclination to open the tongue of taunt and censure, but the emperor forbade them with a look of disapproval and said: "Ikhtiyár Khán do not be offended at my words." The Khán replied, "Your Majesty has the authority, do me the kindness." The emperor said: "It is the etiquette among the kings of my house that when a king does any one the honour (of thus calling him), that

¹ Amír Khusrao who flourished in the reign of Aláuddin (A.D. 1295-1315) is considered, and with justice, the Philip Sydney of the East.

² The original Persian lines are:

مارا ز گرد کوی تو پیرا من است برتن
آن هم ز آب دیده صد چاک تا بدامن

³ The man's name was 'Jamál.' The Khán found out from the Kuráan two words جمع مالا Jamā'a-málan, (vide Sale's Kuráan, Chap. civ "The slanderer") approaching the name Jamál in sound and furnishing a correct allusion, at once to the avarice of the person applying for the enigma and an opportunity for a safe and happy hit at a rival. This is justified by the context too, which says the bon-mot created a laugh at the expense of Jamál.

person should dismount to perform the royal obeisance, and then go back to his place, and if a man like you is done such an honour, he ought to rub his forehead with the royal stirrup, and that is enough for him. You must know (the Kur'anic verse) that 'When kings enter a town, they revolutionize it;' you know the rest."¹ Ikhtiyár Khán, alighting from his horse, and coming near the king, knelt down and kissed the stirrup, and said: "This slave of the Court has been born and bred in the Court of Gujarát and is ignorant of the manners of the Persian Courts and kings. The emperor should pardon him."

It is related that one day a Mulla entered into a discussion on a scientific point with Ikhtiyár Khán in the assembly of Humáyún. After some discussion, the argument of Ikhtiyár Khán prevailed, but the Mulla would not admit it. Humáyún observed that the argument of the Khán was the best, and that the Mulla should not enter into useless altercation. The Khán extemporised an enigma² on the name of Humáyún, which was much applauded by those present in the assembly, and praised by the king.

COUPLET.

No cheating quibbler can o'ercome my love's refulgent ray :
My Moon's bright-light leads hearts alone of those that prize fair play.

After the conquest of Chámpáner, Humáyún went to Cambay, and after having seen that district he arrived at Ahmedábád. The camp of the king was at a village of the name of Ghiáspúr, two miles to the south of the city of Ahmedábád. He went to visit the tomb of Hazrat Kutbul Aktáb Sayad Burhánuddín, the son of Sayad Mehmúd, the son of Sayad Jalál Bukhári Makhdúmi Jeháníán, at Batwa, two miles from Ahmedábád, and saw the *Lohlakkar*³ stone and pronounced it a marvel such as he had never seen before. It is related about this stone, that one day Hazrat Kutbul Aktáb was at the time of the 'tahajjud' or midnight prayers, walking out to answer the call of nature, when suddenly his foot struck against something and pained him. He uttered the following words: "Is it iron or stone,

¹ Vide Sale's Kur'án, Chap. xxvii : "Kings when they enter a city by force waste the same."

² The enigma consists in the Persian words of the couplet supplying also the numerical value of Humáyún's name. The couplet runs :—

کج باز بر نیاید نورِ جمالِ جانان
با ماهِ ماست روشن دلہایِ راستباران

³ The Loh lakkar (meaning literally iron-wood) is still shown at Batwa. It consists of wood, stone, and iron, and hence the name.

or wood or what?" God in one night joined the three things in one.¹ In the morning a mob gathered to see it. The Saint ordered it to be concealed in some deep place and forbade its being dug up and said, "Whoever digs it up shall be issueless." After some years, a merchant dug it up, saying he was content to be issueless to make manifest the miracle of his saint. May God's mercy be on him! Since then they have placed it on a bench of wood, and high and low enjoy its sight. When Akbar Sháh (the Great) visited Ahmedábád, he took away half of it to Agra, and left the other half in its place, and this is preserved as an auspicious relic.

To continue, when the emperor heard of the rising of the Afghán, Sherkhán Súr, who afterwards became a great king and was called Shér Sháh, in Behar and Jaunpur, he left his half-brother Mírza Hindál² in Ahmedábád and Kásim Beg in Broach and Yádgar Násir Mírza in Pattan and Bábbá Beg Jaldér, the father of Sháham Khán Jaldér, in the fort of Chámpāner, and went by way of Asír and Burhánpur to the capital of Agráh. At this time the nobles of Sultán Bahádur, of the names of Malik Amín Nas, who was governor of the fort of Ranthambhor, and Malik Burhán-ul-mulk Bunyáni, governor of Ajmer, and Malik Shamsher-ul Mulk, Governor of Chittaur, having effected a junction came near the city of Pattan with about 20,000 horse, and sent word to Sultán Bahádur, that if he gave them permission, they would engage with Yádgar Násir Mirza. The Sultán ordered them to delay the battle until he could join them. When the Sultán went to that part of the country, Yádgar Násir Mirza, avoided meeting him by going to Ahmedábád. The Sultán came to Pattan and thence marched to Ahmedábád. The enemy issuing thence encamped at Ghiáspur, which place has been mentioned above. The Sultán also pitched his camp on the bank of the river opposite. All night they were ready for battle and made sure that next day there would be a battle. The enemy lighted many lights and leaving them marched off during the night for Mehmúdábád. Near dawn Sultán Bahádur got intelligence of this and pursuing them that very day encamped at the village of Kaníj, which is about five miles from Mehmúdábád. At this time

¹. The sense of the wood turning into stone and iron is this: The Saint as one of Alláh's elect—or in the words of the East, Alláh's beloved, was God. His words were the words of Alláh. As when "Alláh said be thou—and it was," so when the Saint called a piece of wood stone and iron, the Divine force of the words transformed the material into what the Saint fancied it to be.

². This seems to be a mistake. According to Abul Fazl (Akbarnámah in Elliot VI. 15) Humáyun placed Gujarát in charge of his brother Mírza Askari. A little later the author rightly states it was Mírza Askari.

news arrived that the forces of the enemy that were stationed at Broach had come and joined the main army at Mehmúdábád, and that they intended to give battle on the morrow. Early in the morning next day both the armies came into action and the brave men of the armies began to fight. At first the Mughal army, like a strong wind, scattered the clouds of the ranks of the Sultán, though some of the brave chiefs of the Gujarát army—Mírán Sayad Mubárak Bukhári, and Imád-ul-mulk and Malik Jí—stood their ground firm as mountains though clouds of arrows poured on them and the lightnings of swords flashed over their heads. At last the Mughal soldiery fell to plundering, and the army of the Sultán that had dispersed having rallied at the point where the nobles above-mentioned stood their ground, formed and attacked the enemy most gallantly, and suddenly the zephyr of victory blew on the standards of the Sultán. They say that the river Mahi became at that time greatly swollen and many of the fugitives of the Mughal army met their death by drowning. The Sultán went far in pursuit and drove them out of the confines of Gujarát. He then went and stayed at Chámpaner, and sent Muhammad Sháh Asiri, his sister's son, with a large army in pursuit of the flying Mughals who were not allowed to stop even in Málwa. Muhammad Sháh pressing forward passed Mándu, and pushed on in pursuit as far as Ujjain, where he took breath and encamped on the bank of the Káliáwah river, halting a night in the palaces built by Násiruddin of Mándu on its bank.

Sultán Bahádur victorious and triumphant returned to Ahmedábád and remained there a long time.

The period of the stay of Mírza Askari and the above-mentioned Mughal nobles in Gujarát was nine months and some days.

The only anxiety that now weighed down the heart of the Sultán was owing to the Firangis (Portuguese) having obtained a footing and built a fort of their own in Div. ~~The Sultán was night and day~~ thinking of some means to get rid of these infidels.

ACCOUNT OF THE ENTRY OF THE PORTUGUESE IN THE PORT OF DIV BY DECEIT AND ARTIFICE, AND THE MARTYRDOM OF SULTAN BAHADUR IN THE PERFIDIOUS ASSEMBLY OF THEIR CAPTAIN.

When by the turn of the wheel of fortune, Sultán Bahádur was defeated, as has been described above, and he came to Div, the Firangis offered to serve him and showed him sympathy, saying that the ports of the seas were in their hands and that to whichever port the Sultán wished to go they were ready to serve him in every way. On his part the Sultán also began to treat them with mildness.¹ One day they represented that the goods of the traders of their race who came to Dív had to remain dispersed and in great insecurity, so that if the Sultán gave them land equal only to a cow's hide in extent, that they would enclose it within four walls, for the safety of their goods. The Sultán granted their request. After this, when the Sultán left Dív and went against the enemy, the Firangis got a cow's hide and cutting it into thin ribands enclosed land according to its measure and built a strong fort and mounted it with pieces of ordnance and occupied it. When this news reached the Sultán he became very anxious and began to think of dislodging these infidels. But he wanted to gain his object by artifice and stratagem, or by the easiest of means. He went from Ahmedábád to Cambay and from that place set out for Dív. The Firangis thought that the arrival of the Sultán meant some treachery, and though the Sultán adopted the most amiable demeanour towards them, the Firangis took it to signify the reverse. While encamped on the seaside near Ghoga the Sultán sent one of his associates, Núr Muhammad Khalíl, to the Firangi Captain instructing him to bring the latter to him by any pretext or artifice he could devise. They say that when that fool met the Captain he was so fascinated by his high courtesy and the variety of his kindnesses that the Captain was able easily to elicit from him the real motives and intentions of the Sultán, while Núr Muhammad was intoxicated with wine. The responsibility for the truth or falsehood of this story rests on the narrator. The night passed in this wise. In the morning the Captain told Núr Muhammad that he was a loyal slave of the Sultán but could not go into the presence owing to sickness. Núr Muhammad returned and related this to the Sultán. The Sultán said he was afraid the Captain had probably become apprehensive of something, and that he himself would go to enquire after his health, and after removing his suspicions bring him back with him. The Sultán took with him five or six of his chief nobles. They were Malik Amín Nas Fárúki, Shujáat Khán and Langar Khán, the son of Kádir Sháh (Mallú Khán) of Mándu, Alif Khán, the sons of Sheikha Khatri, Sikandar Khán, Governor of the province of Sanwás, Ganeshráo, brother of Medáni Rái.¹ The Sultán ordered them not to carry their arms. It was in vain that ministers and nobles counselled that it was not becoming the royal dignity of the Sultán to go it booted not and according to the holy verse: "When their hour cometh they tarry not an hour nor do they hasten," the Sultán sped to his own destruction.

¹ Bahádur followed this temporising policy with the Portuguese as he dreaded Humayun's pursuit of him even as far as Dív, and, as a matter of fact, the Mughal Monarch had advanced as far as Dhandúka, when owing to Sher Khán Sur's rising he had to retrace his way to Upper India. (See Abul Fazl's Akbarnamah Elliot VI. 15).

VERSES.

To work his fateful stern emprise,
Grim Death has fingers five,
With two he shuts his victim's eyes,
With two to close his ears doth strive,
And with the fifth upon his lips,
Cries hush for ever more!

He stepped into the boat. The Portuguese Captain came to receive the Sultán as far as the shore and took him to his quarters (on boardship) and began to show him the most deceitful respect. The Sultán also talked in the same fashion, but as Fate did not favour his designs it was of no avail. After some conversation the Firangis began to make signs among themselves. The Sultán now understood that matters had gone beyond his power and that the tide of good fortune had turned against him. The nobles said: "Had we not warned you and foretold that you would cause our ruin?" He said: "It was thus ordained by destiny." The Sultán got up and the Firangis poured in from all sides. They say that Sultán Bahádúr had already reached the boat when a Firangi came from behind and by a blow of the sword made the Sultan a martyr, and threw him into the sea. All his companions also attained the rank of martyrs.¹

¹ Abul Fazl mentions Rûmî Khán to have been one of the party stating that he was saved from drowning by a friendly Portuguese. But the author does not give his name among the nobles enumerated. (Elliot VI. 18).

² Of the various accounts given of Bahádúr's death both by Persian and Portuguese historians, the narrative given by Abul Fazl (Akbarnámah in Elliot VI. 19) seems the most natural and in keeping with Bahádúr's impetuous vigour and bravery. Abul-Fazl says that when on reaching the Viceroy's ship Bahádúr found the Viceroy's sickness to be feigned he sought at once to return. The Portuguese were unwilling that such a prize so nearly secured should so easily slip out of their hands. So the Viceroy asked the Sultán to tarry a while and inspect some curiosities he had brought for him. Bahádúr saying they might be sent after him turned quickly to regain his boat. A European Kázi or priest placed himself in the Sultán's way, seeking to stop him. Bahádúr cut him down and leaped into his own boat. The Portuguese vessels surrounded the Sultán's boat and a fight ensued. Bahádúr with another noble threw himself overboard. The noble was saved by a friendly Portuguese. The Sultán perished in the waves.

It seems from a comparison of all the accounts that the Portuguese did not contemplate Bahádúr's death at that time, but that each party hoped to seize the person of the other. Mutual suspicion turned into a fatal affray, a meeting which both parties intended to be peaceful. (See Appendix I. Gazetteer History of Gujarát contributed by the translator).

COUPLET.

"Fie on the trickery of fool-favouring fate,
That makes the lion quarry for the cur."

This event happened on the 3rd of the blessed month of Ramazán A. H. 943 (about February 12th, A. D. 1536). This date can be gathered from a date-script composed by the vazír Ikhtiár Khán:—سلطان البر و شهيد البحر: Sultán-ul-barri-wa-Shahíd-ul-bahr, or the Sultán of the land and the Martyr of the sea. The date can also be obtained from the phrase قتل سلطان بهادر Katli-Sultán-Bahádur, i. e., the assassination of Sultán Bahádur. The Sultán was twenty years of age when he ascended the throne, and reigned eleven years. He was thirty-one years of age when he attained martyrdom.

Let it not be concealed that most of the people of Gujarát say that the Firangi General, that is to say, the chief of their ports, had come to Tarak Bandar with one hundred and fifty ships and had anchored off Sankalcote. The Sultán to show his sincere cordiality (to the Firangis) went to see their ships. When the Sultán's barges came among the vessels of the Firangis they surrounded them and striking with lances, killed the Sultán and his companions, and threw their bodies overboard. This, the people of Gujarát say, is the true account. They say that the enmity of the Firangis against the Sultán owed its origin to his writing to the Sultáns of the Dakhan to co-operate with him in attacking the Portuguese with a view to the re-capture of the Gujarát and the Dakhan ports that had fallen into the hands of the Firangis. This communication fell into the hands of the Portuguese and was the cause of their action. God knows best.

They say that when on this visit of his to Div, Sultán Bahádur reached Mángalore¹ (which is sixty miles from Div), Kázi Mehmúd who was the ruler of the religious ordinances of that town stated to the Sultán that there was in that town a schismatic called Sheikh Yásín Suwari, who had a habit of refusing to repeat the creed when called upon to do so.² The Sultán said: "Call him." He was brought to the presence. The Sultán sent him word to repeat the creed.¹ He said he would not. The Sultán asked the reason. He said: "I know—and my God—who are you to ask me to repeat it, and why should I repeat it before you?" The Sultán ordered him to be taken out, saying that he might be allowed to go if he repeated the creed, if not, that he should be beheaded. However much people persuaded the half-witted man to repeat the creed, he persisted in refusal. They reported this to the Sultán and he repeated the order to kill him. When the executioner drew his sword the man asked him to convey his last words to the Sultán. They were: "Tell the Sultán that from my death to thy destruction more than a week shall not elapse." By the ordainment of God, what the Sheikh had foretold exactly came to pass.

¹ The modern Mángrol, north latitude 21° 8' east longitude 70° 10' is a seaport town on the South Coast of Kathiawar. It is supposed to be the Moneglossum emporium of Ptolemy (A. D. 150).

² For a Mussalmán to refuse to repeat the creed when called upon to do so, is heresy.

COUPLET.

" Who knows that in this depthless sea,
The pebble or jewel more precious be."

To continue, after this event the high dignitaries, ministers and nobles of the state such as Imád-ul-mulk, Malikji and Daryákhán Husein and Ikhtiyár Khán Khánji and others, sent the bad tidings of the martyrdom of Sultán Bahádur to Muhammad Sháh Fárúki, who was the sister's son of the Sultán and the ruler of the country of Asír and Burhánpúr, and who at the head of some sixty or seventy thousand horse was then encamped in the city of Ujjain under Málwa, and invited him to Gujarát. They said that the late Sultán had during his life appointed him his heir apparent, having one day seated him on the throne and ordered the nobles and ministers of the state to do him honour, and that they had all obeyed. The Sultán had taken the course to publish the wish and desire that after him the rule and the kingdom may descend to him. It was with this intention that he had nominated Muhammad Sháh to the command of the Dakhan (forces) and had appointed most of the famous nobles under him, some of whom were his equals, and others who like Mallú Khán, the ruler of Málwa and Sikandar Khán Governor of Satwás and Silehdi, the Rájput Governor of Ráisen, considered themselves superior to him in rank. These did not like to submit to the command of Muhammed Sháh. The Sultán, having learnt of their scruples, had, with a view to remove, them, seated Mirán Muhammad Sháh on the throne and had himself saluted him that no one might object to serve under him.

¹ The first tenet of the creed is called "the good word" the 'Kalimah-i-Tay-yibah.' It is this:—"There is no God but Alláh, and Muhammad is His Prophet"—a tenet which the great free-thinker, Gibbon, has immortalised by his well-known epigram: 'An eternal truth and a necessary fiction.'

When Sultán Bahádur attained martyrdom, Ikhtiyár Khán and Afzal Khán were at Ahmedábád. Imád-ul-Mulk and Malik Jivan Tawakkul who was the head of the royal Slave-nobles and the first in bravery and valour, being then at Baroda and having there heard of this event, also went to Ahmedábád. At this time news came that Mirza Muhammad Zamán, the son of Bad-i-úz-Zamán, the son of Sultán Husein Bábakara, the king of Khurásán who has been mentioned above, was at Ūna, a town twelve miles from Dív, and that he was entertaining thoughts of laying claim to the Sultánate. That he had been to the chief wife of the late Sultán, and with great humility and mildness had said that the late Sultán (may he be forgiven) had no son and had called him brother, and that if the lady adopted him as a son and supported him he would conduct the affairs of the kingdom in the best way; he said he was by descent the most deserving of this. His object was, if the ladies consented, to take their gold and ornaments and spend them in raising an army. The ladies replied that he was mistaken if he thought that they had as great a right of interference in affairs of state as the ladies of Persia had. That their incomes and maintenances were fixed and that they had nothing to do with state affairs. That he had best represent the matter to the ministers and nobles and consult them.

When the ministers and nobles heard of the designs of Mirza Muhammad Zamán, they considered the duty of removing this evil foremost in importance and they said the fittest person to do this was Imád-ul-Mulk, who, they suggested, should in person go there. Vazír Ikhtiyár Khán especially talked in a manner very complimentary to Imád-ul-Mulk to induce him to go. He went so far as to say that they were men of the pen, but Malik Imád-ul-Mulk was a man of the sword like whom at that time there was nobody in Gujarát. This speech did not please Vazír Afzal Khán who said: "Yes the Khán is right. No one of the chief nobles of the Sultán is equal to Imád-ul-Mulk in rank, only he has never fought a battle nor broken a hostile rank." From these words Imád-ul-Mulk turned away his face and ultimately left for Sorath with a strong force for the expulsion of Mírza Muhammad Zamán. He reached the vicinity of the town of Únah by forced marches. Mírza Muhammad Zamán came forward and gave battle and was defeated. When the news of the martyrdom of Sultán Bahádur and the prompt endeavours of Mírza Muhammad Zamán to obtain the throne of Gujarát reached Humáyún, he is reported to have observed :—"If that black slave (meaning Imád-ul-Mulk) is alive, the designs of Mírza Muhammad Zamán will not succeed."

Imád-ul-Mulk after his victory returned triumphant and victorious to the capital city of Ahmedábád. Afzal Khán and Ikhtiyár Khán both of whom were wise, prudent and accomplished men said to one another, "The head of this slave had turned, even before he had gained this victory—how will he now act upon our advice and wishes? We had better throw up the office of vazir and retire from the turmoil of business, and refrain from saying a word about state affairs. For if we keep up our connection with affairs it may one day happen that you or I may have to give advice and it may be disregarded and create ill-feeling. It is therefore better that we should act so as to avoid a cause of difference."

VERSES.

"The moth that to the candle flies,
Though drawn by Love gets scorched and dies,
What though Love's union be his aim,
He is no less burnt by his flame."

Ikhtiyár Khán said, "There has never hitherto appeared any difference of opinion between him and me and he also will not run counter to my wishes." Afzal Khán said, "However much we may try to agree with him, our very presence will be irksome to him." But the words of Afzal Khán made no impression on the mind of Ikhtiyár Khán, and Afzal Khán said to himself : "The Khán has become old and his dotage has weakened his brain ; let me mind my own business, he surely knows his own best." He went to his house and laid aside all the worldly appurtenances and detached himself from all mundane matters, and placing a padlock on his door and tying the key to his trouser-string, he entered his house. He kept only one servant to cook and serve his meals to him. They say that on the day that Sultán Mehmúd ordered the house of Alam Khán to be plundered by the public, and himself rode to the house of Alam Khán (to witness the execution of the order) he passed by Afzal Khán's house which was on the way to Alam Khán's house. When the Sultán passed by his house Afzal Khán came forth and made his obeisance to him. Up to that time, he had not set foot out of that house, nor received any visitors except a dervish in whom he had faith and to receive whom he used himself to open the padlock and admit him to his house. After enjoying the company of the dervish when the dervish used to go away the Khán would retire into his usual solitude.

What happened to Ikhtiyár Khán, together with the account of the sack and plunder of Alam Khán's house shall, God willing, be stated in its proper place.

Take we up now the thread of our narrative from where we dropped it. They say that when the letter of the nobles and ministers, conveying the tidings of the death of Sultán Bahádur and inviting Muhammad Sháh to come over to Gujarát reached Muhammad Sháh, that from the excess of the love Muhammad Sháh bore for his uncle, the broad world became narrow in his eyes. From that day he bade adieu to all worldly pomp and bodily pleasures. He began to fast every day and break his fast at sunset with a little whey and pass the whole day in prayers. He did not communicate the news of the demise of his august relative to any one of his soldiers. He never talked to any one, but if he ever opened his lips it was to utter the words I am burnt! I am burnt!" They say that at this time there were about sixty or seventy thousand horsemen with Muhammad Sháh. One of his nobles congratulated him on his accession to the throne of Gujarát, but Muhammad Sháh said: "If they gave me dominion over the fourth (or) habitable (part of this) world, without my uncle Sultán Bahádur, it would be nothing to me." On the seventieth day after the martyrdom of Sultán Bahádur, Muhammad Sháh also resigned this life.

When the news of the death of Muhammad Sháh reached the ministers and nobles (of Gujarát), they said, no other heir to the kingdom now remained except Mahmúd Khán the son of Latíf Khán, the brother of Sultán Bahádur. At this time this Mahmúd Khán and Mubárák Khán, the brother of Muhammad Sháh, were both in confinement in the town of Biáwal in the province of Khándesh. They say that when Sultán Bahádur jealously slew all his brothers, except Mahmūd Sháh, who was then an infant at the breast, no near relative of his remained. One day, he sent for the infant also with the intention of killing him. When however his eyes fell on the little Khán he was moved with compassion and took the infant up in his arms. The hand of the little Khán while he was throwing it up and moving his little limbs and kicking as children are wont to do, fell and closed upon the beard of the Sultán. Bahádur Sháh, struck with pity by the innocent unconcern and helplessness of the child said :—"Thou conjurest us by our beard¹ to give thee protection. We grant thee thy life and give up the thought of thy destruction." He handed him over to his guardians to keep him and bring him up in confinement. After the lapse of some days he again sent for Mehmúd Khán. Those who had charge of him took him to the Sultán from his schoolroom in the clothes he happened to be then in. When the Sultán saw the soiled and untidy condition of the little prince's apparel, he was displeased with the custodians and said, "Is this the way you take care of a prince? Is this meet dress for princes and is this the proper state in which you should bring him before me? If you act so with him to-day and if to-morrow perchance he becomes a king, he will surely avenge these wrongs on you." Muhammad Sháh also happened to be present in that assembly so after saying this, when the Sultán looked at Muhammad Sháh he added (having as has been mentioned above previously appointed Muhammad Sháh his heir), "It is settled that after me Muhammad Sháh will be king." He then said to Muhammad Sháh, "Muhammad Sháh! I entrust Mehmúd Khán to your care. Treat him as you think best having due regard to your own circumstances." Muhammad Sháh made over both Mehmúd Khán and Mubárák Khán his own younger brother, to the charge of Malik Shamsuddín with orders to keep them in confinement in Biáwal, a town under Burhánpur. Mehmúd Khán and Mubárák Khán used to live in the same house at Biáwal. After the death of Muhammad Sháh his son, who was of tender years, ascended the throne of Khándesh. The chief nobles and ministers thought that Mubárák Khán, the brother of Muhammad Sháh, was both young and clever. Lest he should raise a disturbance, they thought it would be better to wipe his name off the page of existence. So they sent a number of people to bring him to Burhánpúr the capital of Khándesh, and there to kill him. But, God willing, this shall be detailed in its proper place.

¹ To put one's hand to the beard of another is a gesture of humble entreaty and supplication. It possibly means "by the honour of this beard save me."

When the news of Muhammad Shah's demise reached the nobles and ministers (at Ahmedábád) they said there was no heir to the Kingdom except Mehmúd Khán. They wrote to Malik Shamsuddín, the governor of Biāwal, that after the martyrdom of Sultán Bahádur the people of Gujarát hoped to make Muhammad Sháh their king, but God's intentions with regard to him were different. There remained now no heir to the throne besides Mehmúd Khán. It was proper that he should be sent soon, to take charge of the kingdom of his ancestors. They sent Muḡbil, the brother of Ikhtiyár Khán, to proceed by forced marches and bring the prince. Malik Shamsuddín made over the prince to Muḡbil Khán, who started on his return to Gujarát, and sent Mubárák Khán to Burhánpur. They say that the nobles and ministers (of Khándesh) made over Mubárák Khán to nobleman of the name of Íbrat Khán to take care of him for the night intending to do with him as should be resolved upon on the morrow. Íbrat Khán took Mubárák Khán to his house and told him to demand whatever his heart wished for that night, for, said he, "to-morrow you know well, what will come to pass." Mubárák Khán, with tearful eyes told him:—"To night remove the fetters from my hands and feet and co-operate with me and see what I do. If I am killed my name and yours shall live for aye; if I live and Heaven protects me, I shall give you a reward the memory of which shall ever remain indelible on the page of time." God softened the heart of Íbrat Khán and he removed the fetters from Mubárák Khán's feet and rose to help him. Mubárák Khán and Íbrat Khán with some of the latter's slaves and followers went near dawn to the royal palace and commenced to kill and to take prisoners. The guards at that time had gone away to their houses. There was nobody except menial servants, some of whom were killed and others ran away. Mubárák Khán taking his nephew on his lap ascended the throne and sent a message to the nobles that the regency of the kingdom during his nephew's minority pertained to him, and that the nobles should remain on their fidelity and loyalty well assured of their safety. All of them submitted. That day passed thus. At night he slew his nephew and in the morning, issuing forth, he sat on the throne by himself. The nobles came and did him homage, and with folded arms stood, each in his proper place. They struck coin in the name of Mubárák Sháh and his title of Khán became changed into that of Sháh. The Disposer of all dominion gave the land to Mubárah Sháh and sent his nephew to the kingdom of non-existence.

COUPLET.

All night he wept besides the sick man's bed,
At dawn the sick was whole the mourner dead.

ACCOUNT OF THE ACCESSION OF SULTAN MEHMÚD II.
ON THE THRONE OF THE KINGDOM. THE OP-PRESSION OF THE NOBLES OVER HIM IN THE COMMENCEMENT OF HIS YOUTH AND THE SULTAN'S VICTORY OVER THEM AFTER-WARDS BY GOD'S HELP.

Those acquainted with events relate, that in the year A. H. 943 (A. D. 1536) Sultán Mehmúd II. ascended the throne of Gujarát, in the eleventh year of his age. His mother was the daughter of Behráh Khán, prince of Sindh, who was a descendant of Tamím Ansári,¹ may God be pleased with him! Sultán Mehmúd was born in Sorath in A. H. 932 (A. D. 1525), in the life time of Sultán Muzaffar II. They say that on his birth Sultán Muzaffar consulted the astrologers as to his future. The astrologers said his fortune showed signs of his becoming the lord of a kingdom, but that there was one Constellation which threatened a certain period of his life with misfortune. As the measure of Sultán Muzaffar's life was nearly full, and as he knew that it was difficult to recover from the disease he was suffering from he had grave apprehensions as to the safety of his other children after his death. So he made over the throne in his life-time to Sultán Sikandar, and gave Latíf Khán (a younger son of Sultán Muzaffar and the father of Sultán Mehmúd II.) a hint saying, "God's world is wide, betake yourself to a safe corner and throw not away the opportunity of enjoying the few days of this fleeting life in happiness." He sent some money to Latíf Khán for expenses adding that if he stayed his brother from kingly jealousy would kill him. Latíf Khán set out travelling.

¹ The Ansáris or Helpers were those of the people of Madínah who gave shelter to and helped the Prophet on his flight from Makkah, the event which in History is designated, the Hijrah or Flight. The title has become one of honor and is retained by their descendants to this day. The Sumras of Sindh claimed descent from the Ansári here mentioned, though the claim does not appear to be well-founded. Sir Henry Elliot (History of India. I., 483, 490), believes the Sumrás to be of the Pramára subdivision of the Agni-kula race of Rájputs.

The public Friday sermon was read and coin was struck in the name of Sultán Mehmúd and the post of minister was conferred on Imád-ul-Mulk, whose name was Malik Jíwan bin Tawakkul, and Darya Khán whose name was Husein was styled the "Majlis-i-Girámi" or (member of the) Exalted Assembly or High Councillor. Imád-ul-Mulk and Darya Khán in concert carried on the Ministry and the revenue affairs of the State. They appointed Ikhtiyár Khán, vazir of the late Sultán Babádur, and brother of Muḵbil Khán and Diláwar Khán son of Muḵbil Khán, to wait upon and watch the Sultán whom they kept in a kind of surveillance, not permitting any one to approach him with the exception of certain servants who were in their confidence. The Sultán had to eat what food they sent him and wear what clothes they provided him with. The Sultán chafed under this treatment, but from his great sagacity and sharp intelligence he never showed his annoyance. He absorbed himself to such an extent in amusement and sport that he never showed any the least concern for his kingdom or his army. He used to take every opportunity of saying both in public and private: "A king who has ministers like Daryá Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk has no business to bother himself with affairs of state, the chief object of being a king is leisure and ease; these I am able to secure and enjoy to an eminent degree; what care I for affairs civil or military? My ministers and statesmen know the wants of the kingdom, and will surely do that which is best for it." He used sometimes to make inquiries about Makkah and Madínah, "For," he would say: "my desire to visit those holy places has taken the form of a resolution." Speeches like these used to lull his ministers into happiness and security, and they used with the greatest satisfaction to administer the affairs of the kingdom. One day Lád Khán, the son of Muḵbil Khán, said, "If the Sultán orders I shall kill both Darya Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk." The Sultán judging that these words would not remain secret, all the attendants then present being the confidential partisans of the ministers, at once mounted, and went to the house of Imád-ul-Mulk and communicated to him what the son of Muḵbil Khán had proposed. Imád-ul-Mulk called Daryá Khán to his house and repeated to him what the Sultán had said, and they both went to the Sultán's palace. They sent for Ikhtiyár Khán and Muḵbil Khán and Lád Khán, Muḵbil Khán's son and strangled them in full Durbár. This happened in A. H. 944 (A. D. 1537). The words: Ba-náhakk kushtah, unjustly killed, form the chronogram of the year of their death. They say that when they were adjusting the rope round the neck of Ikhtiyár Khán, he raised his hands to Heaven and said, "God Almighty ! thou knowest that I am innocent. I know nothing of all whereof they suspect me, and they are murdering me unjustly." He had begun to repeat the creed when the executioner tightened the rope. After he died and became cold they got him down and loosened the rope from his neck ; his eyes which had started from the sockets went back to their original condition and his tongue finished the words of the last half of the creed—"Muhammad is the Prophet of Alláh," and he died. That Ikhtiyár Khán should have had such a Godly end is not to be wondered at. He was a pious, devout and innocent man. They say that when Imád-ul-Mulk saw this occurrence he said : "Oh Darya Khán ! the last moments of this man argue that he was innocent, and if it was so we have killed him unjustly and tyrannically. His blood will surely bring evil on us." And ultimately it proved so and Imád-ul-Mulk was tortured to death in a most painful manner by the Sultán and Darya Khán had to leave his wife and children and fly for his life to Dehli and died there in exile in great misery, and not a trace of these men remained as shall be detailed hereafter, God willing.

After some time it occurred to Darya Khán to overthrow Imád-ul-Mulk and enjoy the power of the ministry alone by himself. He took counsel with Fattúji surnamed Muháfiz Khán, who was his intimate friend and depositary of his secrets and took the Sultán outside the city on pretence of hunting and brought him hunting as far as the banks of the Mahi, some forty-five miles from Ahmedábád. Here he collected an army from every direction. The greater part of the nobles except the followers of Imád-ul-Mulk came to the service of the Malik. He then sent a message to Imád-ul-Mulk ordering him in the Sultán's name to leave Ahmedábád and retire to his estates. Imád-ul-Mulk seeing that affairs had assumed an unfavourable aspect, tried to assemble an army and take the Sultán away from Daryá Khán's hands. He spent much money from the royal treasury to raise an army, but none of the great nobles would join him. Failing in his endeavours he went to his estate which was Jháláwár. The Sultán came to Ahmedábád. After five or six months, Daryá Khán taking the Sultán with him led an army against Imád-ul-Mulk who gave battle near Pátri, a village of Víramgám, and was defeated. Sadr Khán Zubairi, who was the chief of his army, was slain, and Sharzat-ul-Mulk captured alive. Imád-ul-Mulk went to Mubárak Sháh, the king of Burhánpúr. Daryá Khán took the Sultán in pursuit as far as the Burhánpúr frontier, and sent a message to Mubáraksháh asking him to capture and send the traitor Imád-ul-Mulk and in case he did not, that his harbouring him would not bear good fruit. Mubáraksháh replied that Imád-ul-Mulk was something like his adopted son as he had taken refuge with him, and that he would never cease to protect him. He collected his army and gave Daryá Khán and the Gujarát Sultán battle at the village of Dángri, a dependency of Burhánpúr, but being defeated withdrew to the lofty fortress of Asír. The famous elephants of Mubáraksháh fell into the Sultán's hands. These elephants the names of the best of whom were Báwan Bír, Bát Singár and Singhdulan were animals famed for their enormous size and great courage. Thence the Sultán went to Burhánpur, and Imád-ul-Mulk fled and sought shelter with Kádír Sháh at Mándu,¹ the ruler of Málwa. The Sultán remained for some time at Burhánpúr, and eventually made peace, stipulating that the public sermon should be read and the coins struck in his name. After the return of the Sultán to Gujarát, all the power fell into Daryá Khán's hands, and only the name of royalty remained with the Sultán. Daryá Khán carried on the administration in such a way that there was no one in Gujarát either gentle or simple, who did not bless his rule and was not pleased and grateful for it. The people said that the time of Sultán Mehmúd Begda, which was the best period of the sway of the Sultáns of Gujarát, had returned. Every one lived in pleasure and happiness according to his means. They found in the word Khush-hál (meaning happy) an apt chronogram for the begin-

¹ This was the Mallú Khán of Sultán Bahádur's reign. Mallú Khán became the subject of the following poetical epigram improvised by Sher Sháh Súri when in A. C. 1542, he was dragged down from the throne of Mándu by the weight of that monarch's displeasure and when shortly afterwards Mallú escaped from his captivity :—

باما چه كرد ديدي .: ملو غلام گيدي

See how this slave base-born,

Mallú treats us with scorn.

To which one of Sher Sháh's courtiers as promptly replied :—

قول رسول برحق .: لا خير في العبيدي

The words of the Prophet are true,

A slave, ne'er weal can do !

Farihtah, Persian Text II, 533-34.

ning of his administration. The letters forming this word yield the numerical value of the Hijrah year 945 (A. D. 1538). They say that Daryá Khán gave an exceedingly large number of grants of land (wazifáhs) in Gujarát. There were few pious men to whom Daryá Khán did not give grants. Many soldiers with large families who held estates on military tenure were given additional lands in reward. They say that he used to keep with him numerous blank forms of grants ready made out with the King's seals attached, wanting only the name of the donee and the extent of the land to be given to be inserted, lest deserving people should be kept waiting or should have to experience the bitterness of dancing attendance on clerks and place-men. Whenever he heard of a recluse engaged in God's service or of a deserving person in want, he used to fill in one of those forms the name of the person, the extent of the land yielding revenue proportionate to his wants or deserts, and to send him the grant duly completed. It is related that one day having in this way filled in an order he sent it together with some ready money by one of his servants to a certain pious man. The man by mistake gave the money and the order to another man of the same name. When the Khán heard that the person he meant had not received his donation he inquired of his servant who said he had given it to a certain person, but that if the Khán wished he would take it back from him and make it over to the man the Khán meant to be the real recipient. The Khán said he did not mean the man, but that God had given it to him and that the taking back would change the pleasure it had given into pain and it would not be right. He filled in another firmán for a larger area of land and sent it together with some gold to the right man thinking that as he and the accidental recipient of his bounty bore the same name it would be better if the land given to each was not equal in extent, and also that the firmán or one of the grantees might not in future be considered a forgery. With all these good qualities Daryá Khán was a man of pleasure. He gave up affairs of State to the management of Álam Khán Lodi, and himself fell to the enjoyment of music and sensuality. They say that during the administration of Daryá Khán, every house and mansion, every alley and market-place, echoed with the sound of music and song, of carousal and revelry. He had famous and talented musicians in his service like Náyak Abhú and Náyak Husaini, the son of Náyak Bakhshú, and Rang Khán and Malhaí, the sons of Náik Chatar, and Khem Harman, who had such magic in their song as to bring down and enthrall Venus from the height of the Heavens¹ and whose soul-stirring melody breathed life into the bones of the long departed (famous professor) Náik Gopál. He employed many other singers besides these, each of whom was unsurpassed in his particular branch of the art. Of dancing girls and professors of the Terpsichorean art there were people like Mohanrao and Rang Ráo and Desi Ráo and Kanhúráo² at whose dancing the Heavens suspended their revolution and the Moon looked pale for envy. Sayad Mehmúd Bukhári used to say that he remembered from his father the following anecdote on the authority of Bái Champa, the concubine of Sultán Muzaffar whose mention has gone before. The Bái used to say: "One day Daryá Khán came to pay his respects to me and invited me to one of his parties. As soon as I placed my foot in his hall of entertainment the clouds of perfume that arose overpowered me and the sight of the colours and patterns of his carpets and the elegance and beauty of the painting and gilding of his halls struck me with bewilderment. Though I belong to the harím of Sultán Muzaffar who also had an elegant taste for and was not a little fond of such things, yet even in his time I do not remember having seen such an entertainment."

At last, however, all this state and pomp of his came to an end, and in this wise:—Although accounts of the extremities to which the Khán indulged in and carried his voluptuous and luxurious habits often reached the Sultán, he invariably disregarded, and left unheeded the reports. Nor did the Sultán in public or private display any disgust or dislike. Daryá Khán, however, could never catch a word from which the Sultán's inner thoughts could be understood. He was always trying to find out the real state of the Sultán's mind, and had ordered the attendants to let him know his daily and hourly thoughts. They say he one night sent to the Sultán a girl of the girls of his house in whose intelligence and sharpness of wit he had full confidence. He instructed her, when in privacy with the Sultán, to try and lead the conversation to himself and to speak complainingly and with apparent ill-will of him and to hear what he said. He also told her to say that the Sultán

¹ Venus in the ancient Persian Pantheon holds the place of Terpsichore in the Greek, and is called the dancer of the celestial regions رَقَاصِ فَلَکِ Rakkási falak.

² This word is illegible in my edition of the text. Sir Clive Bayley omits this anecdote altogether. See his History of Gujarat 411, Note 1.

was King only in name and that the enjoyment of virtual power was in the hand of Daryá Khán and that this was far from the jealousy with which kings should guard the royal prerogative. He asked her to communicate to him the reply the Sultán should give her by a certain eunuch early in the morning. The girl went and had the honour of being admitted to the bed of the Sultán. However much she talked of the treachery of Daryá Khán the Sultán did not give ear, and when in the morning the Sultán awoke, he got up and standing on a corner of his cot he voided water¹. When the girl saw this she sent word to Daryá Khán by the eunuch early in the morning relating this circumstance and stating that the poor monarch was crazed and did not know whether to make water sitting or standing. When Daryá Khán heard this, he exclaimed: "My friends, I do not know what to think of this young man! The more I try to fathom him the more I fail. This much I can say that he is either the greatest of all fools or the shrewdest of the wise!" It so happened that one day Alam Khán Lodi and Alif Khán and Wajih-ul-Mulk Tánk and Alp Khán Khatri who were intimate friends of one another and of Daryá Khán asked Daryá Khán's leave to go to their estates. He said: "With pleasure! But it strikes me that I should first show you a performance of my dancing girls and then give you leave." It was fixed that this entertainment should take place the following night. All of them with light and happy hearts went to their homes. When the light of the day changed into the darkness of the night Latif-ul-mulk, another of the intimate friends of Daryá Khán, went to the house of Alam Khán. Latif-ul-mulk was famed for his great beauty, and for that reason, Daryá Khán did not admit him to his entertainments. Latif-ul-mulk used on this account to feel much chagrined and mortified. Going to Alam Khán's house Latif-ul-mulk by way of mischief told him: "I feel great pity for you and have come to acquaint you with the truth. Be it known to you then that Daryá Khán has so arranged that having got up an entertainment and plied you with wine he may kill all four of you." On hearing this they became much concerned and alarmed as to what remedy to adopt to escape from this calamity. Their connection with Daryá Khán was of such a close nature that they could, on the one hand, hardly believe he would entertain such a design against them without cause or reason ; while, on the other hand, they could not doubt Latif Khán's veracity. They passed the night in great care and anxiety and passed the following morning also in the same restless deliberation. When night came Daryá Khán made his preparations for the reception and sent men to fetch the above nobles, who having prepared for death presented themselves. Daryá Khán, ignorant of the suspicions that troubled his friends, his object in giving the entertainment being to promote intimacy, tried to make the reception pleasant by expressing happiness and taking infinite pains to put his friends at ease. His endeavours, however, failed to dispel the cloud of anxiety from their brows. All the guests having arrived the time now came for the cup to circulate. As often as these nobles drank they intimated by signs to one another that the cup they were quaffing was the cup of death, when they glanced at the dancers they began already to imagine them Houris of Paradise. The spirits of the melancholy friends drooped in proportion to the pitch to which rose the hilarity of the mirthful Darya Khán. When Daryá Khán, instead of seeing signs of gratified enjoyment in the faces of his friends, saw them shadowed with anxiety and apprehension, he said : " Friends, what is the matter ? Why do I not see you merry and joyous in such an entertainment ? " They hung down their heads. When he pressed them much for an explanation, Álam Khán said : " It is the fear of losing our lives makes us so ! " " How ? " asked Daryá Khán. " It came to our ears from Latif Khán," returned Álam Khán, " that you would kill us to-night. Having heard such a thing how could our faces beam with happiness ? " At these words the fire of indignation began to rage in Daryá Khán's heart and he broke up the party and sent for the Kuráan and swore on it that what they had heard from Latif-ul-mulk was not in his farthest thoughts. He comforted them and dismissed them, and in the morning they left for their respective seats in the country. Daryá Khán then sent for Latif-ul-mulk and told him : " Thou wretch ! why didst thou invent this lie against me ? " And he ordered his head and beard to be shaved and sent him round the streets of the city astride on a donkey and then committed him to prison. The friends and relatives of Latif-ul-mulk went to the chief men of the city and supplicated them to mediate with Daryá Khán for his release, and his release was obtained. The unhappy man remained for some time concealed in his house till his hair and beard grew again. He then went to Álam Khán and said to him: "Was it becoming of you to bring such a disgrace on one who out of sympathy said a word of warning to you?" Álam Khan was ashamed and told him: "Wait, I give up my claim to the titles of gentility and manliness till I avenge these wrongs on Daryá Khán."

¹ To void the urine in a standing position is in the East a breach of propriety so egregious that the person guilty of it is considered either a reprobate whose evidence the Law of Islám rejects against a respectable Muslim, or a maniac who is not responsible for his actions.

Imád-ul-mulk leaving Burhánpur went to Málwa. Mallú Khán was the ruler of that country. Mallú Khán was one of the house-born slaves of the Sultáns of Málwa. When Sultán Bahádur conquered Málwa Mallú Khán entered his service. The Sultán was kind to him and kept his son Langar Khán in his presence and sent him with Muhammad Sháh in pursuit of the fugitive Mughal army when it was driven out of Gujarát. Langar Khán was killed at Diu with Sultán Bahádur, as has been related above, when Muhammad Sháh also tasted the cup of Death. Mallú Khán remained at Mándu, and consolidating his power by degrees brought all the territories of Mándu under his rule. Mallú and Imád-ul-mulk were close friends and Imád-ul-mulk, while he was in power during the commencement of the reign of Mehmúd Sháh, sent the umbrella of royalty with permission to strike coin in his name and to adopt the title of Kádir Sháh to Mallú Khán. Mallú Khán ordered the public Friday sermon to be read and the coin to be struck in his name, and styled himself Kádir Sháh, and his intimacy with Imád-ul-mulk increased apace. When evil days came upon Imád-ul-mulk, as has been above related, he took shelter with his friend Mallú Khán. Darya Khán, displeased at this, got a royal order to be written to Kádir Sháh in the name of the Sultán to the following effect:—"Though the bonds of friendship and loyalty of Kádir Sháh with the Gujarát House are strong, it was a matter of great surprise to hear that Kádir Sháh had given harbour to Imád-ul-mulk, who, preferring disobedience to duty, had first gone to Mubárák Sháh. Kádir Sháh must have heard what misfortunes his ill-omened advent had brought on Mubárák Sháh. Now that it was heard that Imád-ul-mulk had gone to him (i.e., to Kádir Sháh), it was fit that he should capture him and send him to the foot of the throne or expel him from Málwa and renew his former friendly connection with this kingdom." Kádir Sháh wrote in reply that "Imád-ul-mulk had given up the profession of arms and had become a darwísh. That as he, Imád-ul-mulk, was an old slave of the throne of Gujarát he had bestowed a village upon Imád-ul-mulk, thinking it not meet to allow him to carry his suit to foreign courts. That Sultán Mehmúd might rest assured that Imád-ul-mulk had given up all claims to and ideas of politics, adopted silence and retired to the corner of seclusion and obscurity." Darya Khán was afraid lest his enemy should gain the help of some powerful auxiliary. The possible descent of Imád-ul-mulk even by himself upon Gujarát was to Darya Khán the source of constant dread and disturbance of mind. He was much hurt at these words, ordered a march, and directed the advance equipage of the Sultán to be taken to the palace of Khaundrol, which is situated near the Kánkaria tank outside the city of Ahmedábád. He sent orders to the nobles and military officers to come up with their forces as an expedition against Kádir Sháh was resolved upon. The nobles with their forces came pouring in from all sides. After some time he took the Sultán also to the camp quarters but himself remained in the city. He used to spend about two hours of his time every day at the camp in the Sultán's service, and then returning to the city used to spend the rest of his day in pleasure and enjoyment. The whole of the army too used to return to the city in his following, and only a limited number of guards used to remain with the Sultán and these also after performing their turns of duty used, on being relieved by others, to return to the city.

So long as the Sultán was of tender years he bore all this, allowing things to take their course, but now he had reached the period when he began to step from boyhood into the prime of youth, and his desires began to assert themselves. He began to sigh and be grieved, for what his heart yearned for was enjoyed by Daryá Khán. It is related that, one day Daryá Khán took the Sultán, with Mírán Sayad Mubárák Bukhári, to his house to show them one of his entertainments. When the Sultán entered the mansion, and saw the sylph-like forms of the dancing-girls he well nigh lost his senses. Some of these girls especially so charmed him, that, the large number of valuable jewels that he had brought to present them with, appeared quite trifling in his eyes. The Sultán sat up till late in the night. Daryá Khán then got up from the assembly, retired into privacy with one of those fair-faced ones and with her in his arms sank to sleep. The Sultán was left alone. He could not brook this, and whispered into Sayad Mubárák's ear :—"Míránji ! do you see the insolence of the slave ? He has left us alone, and is drunk, and has presumed fearlessly to retire with that girl ! ” The Mírán said :—“ Never mind Sire ! All these that you have seen, shall before long, be the servants of your Majesty. It is only a question of time ! ”

VERSES.

There is a time for every thing,
A season for each tree,
Tamúz does not the violets bring,
Nor roses the month of Dí.¹

And the sequel did so turn out that all the harem, treasure, circumstance and state of Daryá Khán fell into the hands of the Sultán, as shall be mentioned hereafter.

When Álam Khán heard that the Sultán lived outside the city, that Daryá Khán, with the army, passed the nights in the city, and that the Sultán was much vexed and pained at this treatment, he sent a petition secretly to the Sultán from Dhandúka, which is about forty-five miles from Ahmedábád and which formed a part of Álam Khán's estates, stating that he was an ancient and faithful vassal of the Sultán's house, and could not bear to see Darya Khán lording it over his king in such luxury and pleasure, and his king passing his days in such pitiful privation and penury. That he had therefore retired in silence to his estates, but that if the Sultán had any desire of dominion he might go to Álam Khán's estate and then his servants would remove the oppressor. The Sultán sent Charji, the bird-catcher, whom he afterwards ennobled with the title of Muháfiz Khán, on a pretence of bringing some hawks from Júnágadh, to meet Álam Khán at the town of Dhandúka, which was on the way to Júnágadh, and on his return, to take from Álam Khán the oath of allegiance and fealty. Charji went to Álam Khán, and returned with the most satisfactory professions and assurances from him to the Sultán, and it was arranged that two hundred horsemen should march by night from Dhandúka, and present themselves under the Khamdrol-Palace walls, and that the Sultán, joining them, should be conveyed towards Dhandúka to Álam Khán. On the appointed night the horsemen brought a horse-carriage below the palace walls. The Sultán grasping a rope, alighted, and seating himself in the carriage began to traverse space with the miraculous speed of a saint (fitting through it). In the morning he reached Jám-bwa, a village under

¹ Tamúz, is the month corresponding with July, as Dí is the first month of the winter corresponding with December, of the Syrián and Pahlavi calendar.

Jhálawár, about thirty-nine miles from Ahmedábád. Wajíh-ul-Mulk, the holder of that fief, came forward to meet him and had an interview. The Sultán stayed a little while and again departed, and reached Dhandúka. Álam Khán came, and doing himself the honour of kissing the Sultán's feet, said "May the arrival of the Sultán be auspicious! God willing matters will take the course hoped for by his loyal followers."

When Daryá Khán, after sunrise, according to his custom, went from his house to the Darbár, he heard that the Sultán had gone away to Álam Khán. Daryá Khán asked Fattúji Muháfiz Khán, who was his intimate friend, and confidant, what was to be done. The latter said: "However much I enjoined thee before this, to blind this youth and put such another in his place as would remain submissive to thy control, thou didst not regard my counsel; still, before he has gained power, set up another king, assemble an army, and we shall yet capture him alive."

Daryá Khán, having produced one of the grandsons of Ahmed Sháh from Ahmedábád, caused the public sermon to be read, and the coin to be struck in his name, and giving him the title of Sultán Muzaffar, collected fifty or sixty thousand horse, and advanced on Dhandúka. From the other side, the Sultán, with Álam Khán, at the head of ten or twelve thousand horse, opposed him in the vicinity of the village of Dáher under Dholka, about forty miles from Ahmedábád. They say that though Daryá Khán took infinite pains to try and win the hearts of his soldiery, that they still deserted him and went over to the Sultán.¹ They say that, in this engagement Álam Khán was posted on the right² of the Sultán's forces, and that on the side of Daryá Khán opposite to Álam Khán was Fattúji-Muháfiz Khán, a brave man, one of whose constant sayings was:—"God Almighty! it always surprises me why one man should flee from another!"—On the left side of the Sultán, were Mujáhid Khán Behlím, who was known by his title of Mujáhid-ul-mulk and his brothers and on the side of the enemy, opposite to them was Shamsher-ul-mulk, brother of Fattúji Muháfiz Khán. Wájih-ul-mulk and Táj Khán and Alaf Khán Durráni, the Afghán, and Alp Khán Khatri were in the centre with Sultán Mehmúd. Against the Sultán, on the opposite side, was Daryá Khán and the new king he had set up with the name of Sultán Muzaffar and some other Kháns such as Sultán Aláuiddin, brother of Sikandar Lodi, king of Dehli, who had come and entered the Gujarát service in the time of Sultán Bahádur. In the van on both sides were men of tried valour and experience, veterans who had seen war. They say before van dashed against van in hand to hand combat Álam Khán from the Sultán's side and Fattúji Muháfiz Khán from the other, advanced and engaged in a personal encounter. The conflict lasted for the greater part of an hour and waxed so hot that sparks of fire flashed forth from the cuirasses and helmets of the combatants. In the end Fattúji was defeated and he retired to the centre of Daryá Khán's army. With this part of Daryá Khán's army he again attacked the centre of Sultán Mehmúd. The Sultán unable to withstand the shock was routed and retired to Ránpúr, a town, about fifteen miles, to the west of Dhandúkhá. From Ránpur he went to the village of Kot Pállíád, nearly eight miles from Ránpur in the district of Saroha, under the province of Sorath. Álam Khán, on being defeated, went to Sádra, a place on the bank of the Sábarmati, about twenty-six miles north of Ahmedábád. Daryá Khán returned in triumph and victory, and encamped near Dholka. But the fortune of Sultán Mehmúd was on the ascendant. In spite of the Sultán's reverses on the field, the men of Daryá Khán's army came pouring in to him, deserting Daryá Khán and joining either Álam Khán or the Sultán, so that in three or four days Álam Khán could again muster 12,000 horse. He wrote to the Sultán to join him, saying, that, this time, God willing, they would beat the rebels and capture their leaders alive. When Daryá Khán saw his ranks deserting him and thinning daily and going over to the Sultán, he did not think proper to remain at Dhandúkhá, and marched towards Ahmedábád, thinking that he was after all master of the treasury, and that his gold would again bring him about a large army. But when he appeared before the city, the citizens closed the gates in his face and opened a musketry fire upon him, and would not give him admission, saying he was a traitor. He left the gates, and gained entrance into the city by breaking open the Virámpur wicket. He was daily cheering his men by open-handed gifts of gold, but they went out at nights and joined the Sultán. The Sultán now marched towards Ahmedábád, and Darya Khán fearing lest the citizens should capture him and make him over to the Sultán, sent his women and treasures on with Fattúji to Champáner, instructing him to establish himself firmly there, and that he would proceed to Mubáraksháh at Burhánpúr, and bring him to their aid. With this arrangement he left for Burhánpúr. This took place in A. H. 950 (A. D. 1543).

¹ A longish piece of poetry omitted.

² My translation does not agree here with Sir Clive Bayley's in more than one point. According to my MS. Álam Khán was posted on the Sultan's right and not on left, and it is more likely that the Sultán would at such an important juncture honour him by posting him on the right. Also, according to my MS. Mujáhid-ul-mulk was Mujáhid Khán's title and not the name of his brother. But this, as will be seen further on, is an error.

The Sultán made his triumphal entry into Ahmedábád with good fortune and left for Champáner and going up to that place by forced marches besieged it. Fattúji did not flinch from opposition and fighting, but eventually experienced, what the great and the good have said :—

“Thy liege lord's power attempt not to defy, Thou'lt surely fall though thou art heaven high.”

The Sultán by night of arm took the fort by storm. They say that on the day the fort was taken people saw the Sultán performing such prodigies of valour, as have not been exceeded. The sharp-shooters from the fort brought down six or seven persons standing close to the Sultán, but the Sultán did not budge an inch to right or left, nor did he cause the umbrella to be removed from over his head. However much the Vazír Afzal Khán insisted on the umbrella-bearer moving away the Sultán did not like it, and made signs to the umbrella-bearer to remain where he was, and kept on advancing, until the soldiers scaled the fort on every side, and Fat'úji fled and ascended the citadel called Mauliya, whence he was ultimately captured and brought before the Sultán. The Sultán ordered that he should be confined in the fort of Súrat. All the treasure and harem of Darya Khán, numbering nearly four or five hundred fair damsels fell into the Sultán's hands, and his heart was pleased, and he said to Mirán-Mubárak :—“Mirán Jí! Your words have passed from the curtain of the Unseen into the field of Entity!” The Mirán replied :

“However long he may in freedom roam,
The deer is destined for the lion's maw,”

Is a well-known proverb.

To continue: The Sultán remained victorious and triumphant at Champáner, absorbed for three months in the pleasures of youth. The post of minister was conferred on Ashraf Humáyún Burhán-ul-Mulk Bunyáni, a religious and pious man. They say Burhán-ul-Mulk once saw the Prophet, (on whom be peace) in a dream, and asked him whether what he had heard about the red-rose having been created from the Prophet's sweat was true? The Prophet of God, (on whom be peace) wiped his brow, on which there then happened to be beads of perspiration and threw them down, and lo! they were fresh red-roses. Alam Khán was given the post of Chief of the nobles and Commander-in-Chief of the army. One day, Alam Khán submitted to the Sultán, that Imád-ul-Mulk was an ancient slave of his house and that Daryá Khán had banished him for his own evil ends. If the Sultán issued a farmán of recall to him he would come and kiss the royal threshold. The Sultán issued a farmán for Imád-ul-Mulk's recall.

To continue: After his successes, the Sultán, fancying himself secure from the fickleness of fortune, began to incline towards and show kindness to the base born. He ennobled Charji, the bird-catcher with the title of Muháfiz Khán, and gave him a place about his exalted person.

That mean, narrow-minded wretch, used to drink wine, carry disreputable tales of the nobles and ministers to the Sultán and represent himself his loyal counsellor. The great men and ministers were dissatisfied on this account. About this time Imád-ul-Mulk came from Mándú. The Sultán gave him great respect, and conferring the district of Broach with the port of Súrat on him in fief, dismissed him to his seat.

Charji, the bird-catcher, one day, said to the Sultán at a wine-party: "Health and long life to your Majesty, a new tent wants new-ropes! These old coils will be of no use, their non-existence is better than their existence. But before thinking how to rid ourselves of the others, two men should be killed forthwith: one of them is Sultán Alá-ud-dín, who was with Daryá Khán in the battle that took place near the village of Dáhor; the other is Malikji Shujá-át-Khán, who is also one of those (that joined in taking up arms against their sovereign). The killing of these two shall serve as an example for the others." The Sultán immediately, without consulting any of the ministers or nobles, ordered these two noblemen to be beheaded, and their bodies drawn on the impaling stake, and betook himself to privacy, and allowed no one admittance for three days. Hereupon Alam Khán Lodi said to Imád-ul-Mulk: "Sultán Alá-ud-dín was a brother of Sultán Sikandar Lodi, and this is the third day that his body is lying below the scaffold; tell the Sultán to permit us to take down his body, and give it decent burial." The Malik said: "I have taken leave to depart to my seat." Álam Khán insisted, saying "It does not matter." Imád-ul-Mulk went to the court. As soon as he entered the palace Charji coming out from the Sultán's chamber asked him: "Malik! you were given leave to repair to your seat, why have you returned?" The Malik said: "This is the third day that the body of Sultán Alá-ud-din is lying under the scaffold, go and submit to the Sultán our request to be permitted to bury him. This mean wretch laughed a sardonic laugh and observed with malicious meaning:—"Malik! we have only killed two traitors to-day, we shall ere long kill more, it is no business of yours, go you to your estates." "These words kindled the fire of indignation in the breast of Imád-ul-Mulk, and he said: "My dear Khán! those others are not birds for you to kill so easily!" With these words he got up, and left and went to Alam Khán and related to him all that had occurred, saying: "If you wish to live awhile, kill this wretch of a Charji, and send this Sultán out of the city." Saying so he went to his own quarters, and proceeded to his estates. Álam Khán and Wajih-ul-Mulk, and Alp Khán Khatri, and the whole army except Burhán-ul-Mulk, the Vazir, united together and resolved not to pay their respects to the Sultán till they had killed Charji. Álam Khán with all the nobles armed themselves and mounted and first took the bodies of the two victims and interred them. They then came and posted themselves at the grand mosque in the palace. The Sultán prepared to undergo a seige, and for three days matters went on thus. At last water becoming scarce in the palace, and the Sultán being reduced to extremities, sent Burhán-ul-mulk to them to make enquiries as to their object. They said they were the slaves of the Sultán, and had no complaint to make against him, but that they wanted Charji to be sent over to them, as he was not fit for royal service, and was ever misleading the Sultán. The matter was much discussed, but the Sultán did not agree to give up Charji. At last Burhán-ul-mulk and Afzal Khán suggested to Alam Khán the propriety of their giving in for the present, and not pressing the point further, adding that the Sultán would accept, afterwards, whatever they would say. They said they were not rebels, and desired to be led to the Sultán, that they might pay their respects and return. The Sultán gave them audience. One of the confederate nobles was a secret friend of Charji's. He advised him not to show himself at this audience, as they would surely kill him. But this ill-starred and doomed wretch, disregarding the advice with usual perversity and vain of the royal favour, swaggered in, drunk, and stood behind the Sultán with his hand on the throne. When the nobles came, and each one having made his respects, stood in his respective place. When Álam Khán's glance fell on Charji his anger flamed up, and he gave a signal to his men to despatch the ill-fated wretch. The followers of Álam Khán, Sayad Chánd of Mándú, and Sáleh Muhammad Aláh-diyá and Malik Ládán, having drawn their swords, fell on Charji, who ran and hid himself under the throne, but they seized him by the hair of his head, and dragging him out, cut him to pieces. However loudly he cried for help, and the Sultán ordered his assailants to desist, it availed not. The Sultán in impotent wrath drew out his dagger, and struck at his abdomen, but Alp Khán caught and held his hand. Still the point pierced the surface, and a great uproar arose. They took Charji outside and buried him, and bandaged the Sultán's wound, and placed him under a guard. The rule of the Sultán again ceased from that day, and he fell in the confinement of the nobles. They kept him under surveillance as he used formerly to be, and they left nothing to the Sultán's discretion or power. His favour to the mean bore him this fruit, and his patronage of low persons placed fetters on the feet of his desires as some great man has observed:—

¹ This was a covert allusion to Charji's former avocation.

COUPLET.

"He's not a king who cherishes the vile,
You can't with kingship meanness reconcile."

The king who makes the promotion of low persons his rule of conduct is sure to bring about his own ruin.

They say that the day the Sultán gave Charji the title of Muháfiz Khán, Afzal Khán Vazir, by way of affected ignorance, asked whether anybody knew to what tribe or class Muháfiz Khán belonged. Malik Amín Kamál, who was a poet and a man of wit, said: "I know to what tribe Muháfiz Khán belongs, he is a *Parmár*¹ by tribe, and holds Nariád in fief." Parmár is the name of a tribe of Rájputs, and Nariád is one of the towns of Gujarát. The two words form a witticism or pun. The play on the word Parmár is evident. The other play is on the word "Nariád," a nar (or more correctly a nal) being a long hollow bamboo stick with which they catch birds, Narya being also the name of a bird-catching animal (a ferret).¹ Another pun from Amín-ul-Mulk is also celebrated:—

¹ "Parmár," the name of a Musalmán Rájput tribe, and a play upon the words, par, "wing," and mar, mover, or killer, meaning mover of wings or destroyer of winged creatures, a very apt allusion to Charji's calling of bird-catcher.

One day Sultán Mehmúd asked the eunuch Khán Jehán to what tribe he belonged. He said he was very young when he was captured, and did not remember. Malik Amín said, he knew the tribe of Khán Jehán. The Sultán asked what it was, Malik Amín said, he belonged to the tribe of "Bádhel." Now Bádhel is a tribe of Rájputs, and the word bádhel or vádhel in the (Gujarátí) Hindi language means also cut or castrated. The Sultán laughed much, and ordered a reward of some lális of dáms to be given to him.

To continue: Álam Khán and Wajih-ul-Mulk and Mujáhid Khán and Mujáhid-ul-Mulk, who were the chief men of the State and the army, resolved among themselves to undertake to keep watch over the Sultán by turns: that one day Álam Khán should keep guard over the Sultán, the next day Shujá-úl-Mulk, the brother of Álam Khán, and Wajih-ul-Mulk, the third day Majáhid Khán and Mujáhid-ul-Mulk Behlím who were brothers, with Ázam Humáyun who was the son of an adopted sister of Álam Khán. According to this plan they guarded the Sultán, and so continued to look after him after their return to Ahmedábád. The Sultán, who was fond of polo or chaugán, sometimes wished to have a game. There was an open place for polo playing, in the Bhadr Palace, and he used to play in it; but to go out of the gates of the Bhadr was impossible for him.

Shujá-úl-Mulk, brother of Álam Khán, used sometimes to chaff and make fun of Mujáhid Khán Behlím, who was a fat man with a large paunch. Nisár-ul-Mulk Ghorí, the manager of the estates of Mujáhid Khán and his brother did not relish and was always offended at these jokes against his master. The force contributed by Mujáhid Khán and Mujáhid-ul-Mulk to the Gujarát army was ten or twelve thousand cavalry, and the brothers held a thousand villages of Sorath for the upkeep of this force. One day, the nobles in council assembled, said among themselves that it was not politic to keep on the Sultan in that way, and that they should better draw a red-hot iron across his eyes (that is blind him) and set up some other boy as sovereign in his place ; others suggested it would be better still to divide the kingdom among themselves. No sooner said than they began to parcel out the provinces of the kingdom amongst themselves, saying : " This one shall have this province, and that one the other." Nisár-ul-Mulk, who was the chief man of the meeting, asked what districts they were going to apportion to his master. Shujá-ul-Mulk facetiously observed : " Mujáhid Khán's paunch does not require an increase of estates, there should, on the contrary, be some decrease from what he already enjoys." Mujáhid Khán passed this off as a jest, and the nobles dispersed. Although Mujáhid Khán did not care for these words, his manager Nisár-ul-Mulk was hurt, and said that, although Shujá-ul-Mulk had said the words seemingly in jest, yet they disclosed his inner thoughts on the principle that " a vessel exudes nothing but its contents." So said he, he knew what feelings they entertained towards his master.

¹ Naryád, Narya, or Nurya is a ferret or a mungoose, a quadrupedal bird-catcher, as Charjī was by profession a bipedal one.

" To check the evil ere it harms is best,
Regret is vain when it is passed arrest."

Nisár-ul-Mulk used to frequent the presence of the king more than the other nobles, and the consultation of the nobles to draw a red-hot needle, through his eyes, had reached the king's ears. On hearing this, the Sultán wept and became painfully anxious as to his fate, and said he would much rather they killed than blinded him.

One night Nisár-ul-Mulk told the Sultán that he was a devoted slave of the Sultán's, and that he had something to tell him if he was willing to hear. The Sultán was at first afraid that he might say something in the same way in which the son of Mukbil Khan did, some time ago, as has been mentioned above, and which, he feared, might lead to greater severity on the part of his custodians. So he said guardedly : " What have you to say to me, and what can I do ? " Nisár-ul-Mulk said : " The Sultán of the world must have heard of the resolution of the nobles ? Your majesty has either to accept blindness or to think how to save yourself from this evil ? The Sultán said : " Who is going to help me." He said : Mujáhid Khan and Mujáhid-ul-Mulk, who have ten or twelve thousand horse ready for service." " If," said he, " the Sultán commands, I shall bring them all armed and equipped. When an hour of the night remains, the Sultán should mount in state elevating the royal umbrella and go and storm the houses of Álam Khán and Wajih-ul-Mulk, and order them to be plundered. These two will be sleeping the sleep of security, and we shall God willing, either capture them alive before the enemy has time to assemble, or send them forth to wander in the wilderness of exile." The Sultán said: "Then let Mujáhid Khán and Mujáhid-ul-Mulk come and enter into agreement with us. They were haply present, as that night was their turn of duty with Ázam Humáyún, the relative of Álam Khán. So the two nobles with Nisár-ul-Mulk came and took their oaths of fidelity on the Kuráan. The Sultán said: "Ázam Humáyún is also present, how will you keep this secret from him?" Nisár-ul-Mulk, saying he would send him off to his house, rose and went to Ázam Humáyún and entered into friendly discourse with him. It so happened that in those days, Ázam Humáyún was fascinated by the charms of a female singer, and used always to talk to his friends of his love and passion for her. Nisár-ul-Mulk drawing him into conversation said to him: "One who has a friend like me (to watch over his interests in his absence) need not suffer (the pangs of separation from his lady-love), "why don't you go and enjoy the company of your mistress? Your men are present on guard." Ázam Humáyún said: "Álam Khán sends men two or three times in the night to inquire after me." He said: "Place a pillow length-wise on your bed and spread a sheet over it and order a servant to sit at the foot of your bed and pretend to shampoo you, so that the man from Álam Khán will think you are asleep and go away." Ázam Humáyún did so, and Nisár-ul-Mulk going back to the Sultán told him he had sent him home and had placed five hundred of his own men in the hall of audience and had posted as many thousand well-armed horsemen in the Nikúr Bazár, and that the Sultán should, as agreed upon, mount, at the time fixed, and go to the houses of the traitors. He said he would despatch the men of Ázam Humáyún that were on guard before that, and that, God willing, they should gain their object.

¹ This is the Arabic proverb—" Every vessel exudes what it contains."

The Sultán did just as was agreed upon. When an hour of the night remained, he mounted, and elevating the royal umbrella over his head, he placed the elephants bearing the big kettle drums in front and issued forth. When the people of the city saw the king, they came forth in crowds from every nook-and-corner, and assembled in great numbers. The Sultán gave the order for the houses of the traitors Álam Khán and Wajih-ul-Mulk to be plundered, and that they might be driven out of the city. Nisár-ul-Mulk at the head of his men preceded the Sultán, who followed him slowly. The houses of Álám Khán and Wajih-ul-Mulk were without the city walls outside the Jamálpúr gate. They had spent the night at a dancing party, where, having drunk wine, they were now securely immersed in sleep. They never suspected what calamity the womb of this fateful night would bring forth for them, as the Sultán was their prisoner and they had three or four thousand veteran horsemen of tried valour devoted to their cause, mounting guard over him every night, and the whole army of the kingdom under their orders. Forgetful of the fact, that—

“ When evil fortune grasps the neck,
The veins of the neck become chains.”

They did not think any one in the world could harm them.

They say that the men of Álám Khán and Wajih-ul-Mulk's households were sound asleep. When the uproar arose Álám Khán got up, and, coming to the vestibule, saw that the city vagabonds had entered his house and were crying out : “The orders of the Sultán are that these rascals should not issue forth and must be captured alive.”

Álám Khán was in a state of ceremonial uncleanness¹, so emptying over his head a vessel of cold water, he mounted the horse of one of the orderlies on guard and issued forth. He saw several horsemen advancing towards him. He attacked and slew one of them and the others giving way he rode off. The horsemen joined by some others again pressed in his pursuit. When they came up to Álám Khán they would have fallen upon him and despatched him, but two of his faithful retainers, who had accompanied him, Sáleh Muhammad Aláh-diya the slayer of Charji, and the brother of Sheikh Arzáni Multáni, both turning back, engaged the horsemen in a hand-to-hand combat and were slain. This check gave Álám Khán time to escape; but the members of his family, great and small, were taken prisoners.

¹ The law of Islám ordains two purifications. The ghusl or major purification and the wudhu or minor one. The first, required to be performed in extraordinary cases (such as cohabitation or emission of the semen for men and after child-birth or courses for women) consists in the repetition of certain formula with the total immersion of the body in water. The second to be performed before prayers consists in the washing of the mouth, the face, the hands and feet and other parts of the body in a certain formally prescribed manner and order.

It is related by respectable authorities of Gujarát, that there was a man named Kabír Muhammad, who had passed the greater portion of his life, and had grown grey in Álam Khán's service. He had witnessed the lights and shades of Fortune, and observed the legerdemains of the times and the trickery and the fox-like cunning of the world. When Álam Khán got the Sultán within his power, and confined him within the limits of the Bhadr-walls, and set Ázam Humáyún to watch over him, with five or six thousand devoted and veteran troops, who remained always on guard out of the twenty-eight thousand horsemen set apart by Álam Khán for that purpose, and when Kabír Muhammad saw that Álam Khán himself took up quarters outside the city walls, in the Asoria quarter of Ahmedabad, and entrusting the watch to his nephew Ázam Humáyún occupied himself in luxury and pleasure and wine and wassail, then, they say, this Kabír Muhammad warned Álam Khán. "Sir!" said the old man "you have caged a lion and yourself lounge at ease at home, entrusting him to other hands! Either proceed yourself to watch over him, or take better care of him, and remember what happened before, and fear the day when he breaks his chains, and sets the whole world by the ears. On that day no one will (consider it worth his while to) oppose him." Álam Khán gave him no reply, and, as all the army and all the great nobles were on his side made light of his wise words, and thought them craven counsel. Yet Kabír Muhammad was a brave man. He had seen the reflection of the aspect of the events of this day in the mirror of his experience. From the beginning of this plot against the Sultán this wise man used to sit up every night from sunset to sunrise, armed and accoutred, at Álam Khán's house, expecting this evil moment every night for the last five years, till the black hour really came. Just before the army came to Álam Khán's house, some unknown person ascended a half-ruined minaret near the Jamálpur gate and called out in a loud voice that the Sultán had given up Álam Khán's house to plunder. Álam Khán, who had passed the whole night in revelry and debauch, had dropped into a heavy sleep towards the latter part of the night, when this voice fell on the ear of Kabír Muhammad, who at once going up to the Khán's zanánah called out to the inmates to immediately wake up the Khán, as in a moment the Sultán would be there. The personal attendant present waked up the Khán, who asked what the uproar was. Kabír Muhammad said, "It is the same turmoil that I had anticipated from the beginning. The caged lion has snapped his chains, come out soon." Âlam Khán coming out mounted Kabír Muhammad's horse and set out. Four horsemen blocked the Khán's way. The valiant old man attacked them, and disabled three out of the four. The one that remained put an end to Kabír Muhammad's life. This, however, gave Âlam Khán time to distance his pursuers. God's mercy on the loyal Kabír Muhammad, and his valuable experience !

The house of Wajih-ul-Mulk was also plundered, but his family concealed themselves and could not be found. They say that when the Sultán reached the Nikúr Bazar, he sent Aiyúb Khán, the brother of Násir-ul-mulk, to call Afzal Khán, the old retired minister, who lived in a house in that quarter. When the Sultán reached the door of his house, he came forth and kissed the royal stirrup, and followed the retinue. Till then he had not set foot out of his house, as has been mentioned above. They say, that the Sultán had hardly reached the Jamálpur Gate, when the city people met him carrying loads of the timber, wood-work of Âlam Khán and Wajih-ul-Mulk's houses, and saying that the traitors had escaped and their houses were plundered.

COUPLET.

"A rabble mob is like a fire Destroying where it goes."

The Sultán then returned to his palace. This event happened in the year H. 952 (A. D. 1545).

After overcoming Âlam Khán and Wajih-ul-Mulk, the conduct of public affairs again returned to the Sultán's hands. Âlam Khán fled to Pethápur, which is a village belonging to a Hindu chief. He wrote from Pethápur to Daryá Khán, who had taken up residence in the Dakhan, expressing regret and repentance for his past conduct, and stating that he was conscious that his sufferings were the inevitable and direct result of his actions. He now asked Daryá Khán to come soon that they might both combine and do something. Daryá Khán was in a miserable condition in the Dakhan. He used to dispose of his valuable diamonds at cheap rates, and pass his days on the proceeds. When he came to know that he was wanted by Âlam Khán, he at once set out by forced marches, and they met at a village of the name of Naipura. Daryá Khán said, it was with mature consideration, he used to keep the Sultán in confinement. Âlam Khán said: "Recall not the past,¹ we must do something to avenge ourselves." Daryá Khán said: "We are moneyless, Alp Khán is your friend, and lives in the town of Uklesar (five or six miles from Broach, on the river Narbada). Go you to him and see him, and if you can, meet with Imád-ul-Mulk also. This is very advisable, as you will be able to get some money, also from them, which is very necessary."

Âlam Khán with 500 horse marched quickly and reached Uklesar, and going straight to Alp Khán's house, alighted there. Alp Khán was then at Broach with Imád-ul-Mulk. Âlam Khán sent word to Alp Khan's family, saying: "Give them my blessings and ask them to send me some food, for I am hungry." Now, though Âlam Khán and Alp Khán were close friends, yet at this time as Alp Khán was in the service of the Sultán, and Âlam Khán an outlawed rebel, to send him food and show him hospitality was fraught with danger. What, on the other hand, could Alp Khán's people do? Alp Khán's family, and household, his treasure, and his elephants were in this town, and here was Âlam Khán (an old friend) who had turned up quite suddenly. How could they refuse him such a thing as a meal? So the people of Alp Khán made preparations for Âlam Khán's food, and sent a man to Alp Khán explaining matters.

Alp Khán said: "Does this man want to ruin me too with himself?" He mentioned the circumstance to Imád-ul-Mulk. Now, Imád-ul-Mulk owed his return to power and property to the good offices of Âlam Khán as has been mentioned above. He could not be ungenerous to Âlam Khán, and sent word to him to say that it was not meet that he should have come in that fashion. As, however, he had come, he might re-cross the Narbada and meet him. Âlam Khán did so, and Alp Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk went and met him. Âlam Khán said: "Alp Khán, is it right in the sight of God that I should be in such misery, and you in such ease?" Alp Khán replied: "Now, by your coming you have made me your equal (i. e., dragged me down to a par with you)" Âlam Khán said, still the advantage was on his side, and there was no equality, as he had escaped alive from the Sultán's claws, while Alp Khán was yet within his power, and that if he still did not go out against him (the Sultán) he would not leave him alive. If, said he, Alp Khán wanted to live, he should act in concert with him. He added : "It was at Imád-ul-Mulk's desire that I killed Charji, except Charji's death no crime can be laid at my door." Imád-ul-Mulk said : "It was out and out crudeness of understanding on your part. If you killed Charji, you had no reason to be neglectful in keeping watch over the Sultán. Now the chain has slipped from the lion's neck, and he won't take the noose again." Âlam Khán said : "Let by-gones be by-gones, I shall try now not to fail in whatever I undertake." After great discussion, Imád-ul-Mulk and Alp Khán gave some money to Âlam Khán and dismissed him. Âlam Khán returned to Daryá Khán, and recounted all that had happened. Daryá Khán said : "It was not only to bring funds that I had sent you to these nobles. There was also this motive, that from the day you should meet them the names of these dear friends also should be written down side by side with ours (in the list of rebels), and that they should not have the face to join the Sultán, and would have volens volens to make up with us." And it happened that this news did ultimately reach the Sultán, and threw him into considerable anxiety.

¹ The text has the Arabic proverb: Al-mází-lá-yuzháro—the past is not to be remembered.

About this time a petition from Imád-ul-Mulk reached the Sultán, that Daryá Khán and Âlam Khán were old servants of the State, and it was not becoming that they should have to go to Sher Sháh at Dehli (as refugees). That it was advisable that the Sultán should give them some service on the frontiers. The Sultán agreed to this request of the Malik, when another trick of Âlam Khán broke down this arrangement. When the order for the plundering of Âlam Khán's house went forth, he himself, as has been related above, escaped leaving his family and valuables in the hands of the Sultán. The Sultán entrusted them to the vigilant care of the royal eunuchs and guardians. After a while Âlam Khán sought the support and intercession of Sayad Mubárah Bukhári to get the Sultán's sanction to the exchange of his family for his brother Safdar Khán. Sayad Mubárah moved in his behalf, and obtained the release of his family for Safdar Khán. The Sultán made over Safdar Khán to the Sayad's care, and the Sayad used to keep him with great kindness and courtesy in the upper storey of his own mansion. After some time Âlam Khán sent Sádhu Náyak, one of his followers, to secretly spirit Safdar Khán away to him. Sádhu came and throwing a rope to Safdar Khán one night, got him down, and carried him off to his brother Âlam Khán. At this proceeding Sayad Mubárák was much humiliated and the Sultán thrown into considerable anxiety lest Âlam Khán and Daryá Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk and Alp Khán should again combine and raise a disturbance. He sent an order to Imád-ul-Mulk saying that he considered him one of his liege servants and that it was not becoming that he should suffer Daryá Khán and Alp Khán to remain with impunity in one of the frontiers of his guarded dominions, and create a fear of sedition. He should, therefore, start immediately for the royal presence to consider what steps should be taken against these men. Imád-ul-Mulk wrote an excuse, stating that he would come after making arrangements for the expedition. The Sultán wrote another order summoning him to the capital. This time he wrote back plainly to say that he had committed a great fault in having allowed Âlam Khán to visit him, but that his object being to give him good advice was loyal; as, however, he had done so without the cognizance of the Sultán he considered himself guilty. If the Sultán sent Sayad Ârîshah, the son of Sayad Zâhîd, the son of Kutbul Aqtáb Sayad Burhán-ud-dîn Bukhârî, with his royal parole for his safety he would come under the Sayad's lead. The Sultán went to Sayad Ârîshah and asked him to go and fetch Imád-ul-Mulk. The Sayad said: "Your Majesty is a King, and have always to shape your course of action according to the policy of the time. I am a poor devotee whose business it is to pray, and your Majesty need not put me to this sort of trouble." The Sultán placed his hand on the Kuráan and said: "Between you and me is this sacred Word of God, if from any act of mine any harm comes to the life, the living, or the honour of Imád-ul-Mulk." The Sayad told the minister, Afzal Khán: "The Sultán is young and you are experienced and wise, why do you put me to this trouble?" Afzal Khán said: "Mírânji (my dear lord!) I also swear by the Kuráan and vouch for the sincerity of the Sultán's affirmation. You should not allow any concern to approach your heart and take Imád-ul-Mulk by the hand and bring him here."

The holy Sayad set out for Broach, and the Sultán marched against Daryá Khán and Âlam Khán who were in the neighborhood of Chámpánor. When the Sayad reached Imád-ul-Mulk, he asked him: "Why did you write that Ârîshah should come and take you by the hand. This was not right. Now the Sultán and Afzal Khán have sworn on the Kuráan that no harm should come to your life or property or reputation. Farther, you know best. I am not much conversant with the ways and tricks of the world. If you think it is good for you to go, by all means go with me, if not you are welcome to say no. Never permit yourself to think 'how can I say nay when Árishah has come to call me. I must, by all means, go.' It is easy enough if you do not come with me now. But if you come, and God forbid something untoward happens, that shame will be the hardest for me to bear. I am no wind selling Bhát to be able to rip open my belly with a poniard¹ (in case the Sultán does not keep his word with you), nor have I an army to oppose the Sultán with an fight for you. I am only a poor derotee, and can do little. Whatever you do, do it after mature consideration and great reflection." Imád-ul-Mulk said: "Miyánji! I am now old and infirm, whose door shall I go to? The Sultán has sworn on the Kurán. If he still breaks his oath and does wrong, it is his concern." So saying he sounded the drums for the march, and started for the royal presence. His well-wishers all advised him not to go, saying the Sultán would never act fairly by him, and that the best thing for him to do was to go and occupy some frontier town at the head of ten or fifteen thousand horse and there await the turn of events; that Daryá Khán and Álam Khán and the Sultán were engaged in fighting and that it was very possible the Sultán may sorely need his help and then Imád-ul-Mulk could make peace with him on his own terms. But the Malik would not listen to their words. He said: "How in this advanced age of mine could I be a traitor to him and prove false to my salt? I am an old dependent of this house, how can I harbour evil against it. The Sultán, I am sure, will not act basely towards me."

When the Malik met the Sultán at Champaner with ten or twelve thousand horse well armed and equipped, the Sultán was much pleased and showed him great kindness and attention. This treatment continued for some days. One night suddenly the cry arose:—"The Sultán has given orders for the plunder of the camp of Imád-ul-Mulk." ¹ Before his men could come round Imád-ul-Mulk's camp was plundered. Imád-ul-Mulk, who, for his intrepid valour, was styled the second Rustam, ² had not the strength to mount his horse and fly and escape to the fort of Broach or join Âlam Khán; so taking the hand of one of his kahárs or bearers he told him to take him to the tents of Sayad Mubárák. The servant taking his hand started in the dark night. While being thus led along in the obscurity of the night, the Malik fell into a small well the camp people had dug. In the morning one of the men of the camp going to the well to draw water found a man in the well. He drew him out and did not recognize Imád-ul-Mulk in him. The half-dead noble said: "Lead me to Sayad Mubárák's tents." The man did so, and announced him to the Sayad, who with great warmth and honour took him to his quarters.

¹ The Bháts and Chárans are classes of mendicant Hindus, whose profession in the present peaceful times is to compose poetry in praise of greatmen. In old unsettled times, when might was right, the Bhat or Charan used to stand security for the performance by the powerful of their promises or contracts with the poor. In cases of non-performance the Bhat either killed himself or killed or mutilated an innocent member of his family, ripping himself open in the sight of the promise-breaker and sprinkling him and his house with the blood. This practice is in Gujaráti called the Trága. The blood was believed to bring inevitable ruin on the defaulter. The Mughals very happily termed the Bháts and Chárans Bád furúsh or Wind-sellers from their wordy profession. Abul Fazl in the Aini Akbari calls Bírbal a Bád furúsh by caste.

The Malik told him, "My Lord Sayad pray go to the Sultán and tell him to emancipate his old slave, and send him to Allah's temple of the Kaába." The Sayad went to the Sultán. He saw the Sultán in great astonishment and indignation making extravagant endeavours and strict enquiries as to the source and origin of this disaster. "For," said he, "I never ordered it, and am determined to find out the perpetrators." Of the plunderers that were arrested, he ordered the hands of some and the noses of others to be cut off, and ordered that it might be ascertained where the Malik had gone, saying, "If he has joined Âlam Khán and Daryá Khán, there will be—God forbid—a great disturbance." At this moment Sayad Mubárák appeared with his information, and the Sultan was much relieved and agreed to send the Malik to the Kaába and sent for him. When he came he gave him in charge of Sidi Barji and Sidi Amin, the house-born slaves of Jhujhár Khán Habsli, to be taken to Súrat and made over to Khudáwánd Khán Rúmi, the fief-holder of these parts, to be conveyed to the Kaába at the opening of the pilgrimage season. They say these events happened during the fasting month. While on their way to Súrat one day at the time of breaking the fast Sídí Barji handed his water cup to the Malik. The Malik looked into his face as much as to imply tacitly that it was impolite for him, a prisoner, to drink off his custodian's vessel. Sídí Barji, however, said: "Malik, we are no better than the smallest of your slaves." By this hint he meant to convey the meaning: "What can we do? We have to submit to the King's orders." Alas! The world is just such a place! Now it raises one so high as to make his charger tread the height of the heavens, anon it drives him on foot on sharp stones. He is truly a man who, in whatever condition he be, does not overstep the bounds of propriety and does not allow himself to be fascinated by the wiles of this guileful world.

¹ Sir Clive Bayley on the authority of one of his MSS. states that the cry to plunder Imád-ul-Mulk's camp was, without the Sultán's knowledge, raised by some seditious rascal, and distinctly asserts that the Sultán was totally ignorant of the transaction. See Bayley's History of Gujarát, p. 434.

² Rustam, who flourished about the middle of the 6th century before Christ became the hero of Persian chivalry during the long wars between that country and Túrán and holds the foremost place as such in Persian Poetry.

To continue. They conveyed the Malik to Khudáwand Khán Rúmi on the 27th of the holy month of Ramazán, the year 952 (A. D. 1545). Khudáwand Khán killed the Malik after subjecting him to severe torture. The public now perceived that Ikhtiyár Khán was innocent, and that Imád-ul-Mulk had killed him unjustly as has been detailed above.¹

After the decline of the fortunes of Imád-ul-Mulk, the Sultán appointed Sayad Mubárák against the rebels Daryá Khán and Álam Khán. The rebels gave battle and were put to flight, and Sayad Mubárák returned triumphant and victorious. The Sultán then honoured Násir-ul-Mulk by appointing him to move against Álam Khán and Daryá Khán, to drive them from the limits of Gajarat. Násir-ul-Mulk pursued them, till he drove them to uninhabited fastnesses and wilds and stopped there some time. At last they went to Sher Shah Súr, the Afghán-king of Dehli, and the Sultán's power was now firmly re-established.

The above events are thus laconically recorded by Áráam, the Kashmirean, in the history called the Tuhfat-us Súdát, which he wrote for Sayad Mubárák:—

"When the age of the Sultán exceeded fifteen years and approached near upon twenty he began to discern good from evil and discriminate his friends from his foes. He then overthrew those of the nobles that were hostile to him and expelled others from the country."

¹ See ante. Beginning of Mehmud III.'s reign.

How can such a short notice give a faithful account of the history of the country? This humble person has, for this reason, related the events that happened at this period by recording the occurrences as they happened and following the old accounts as far as possible. Although the birth of the writer took place in the reign of the Sultán of blessed end who had made Mehmúdábád his capital and though he was an infant in arms at the time of the Sultán's martyrdom, yet the writer's father and brother Sheikh Yúsuf were acquainted with some of the events which they communicated to him and he completed his record of the others from respectable persons who personally took part in them.

To continue. After consolidating his power, Sultán Mehmúd recalled and gave the place of Grand Vazír to Ásaf Khán, the Vazír of the Sultán Bahádur, whom, on the invasion of Gujarát by the Emperor Humáyún, Sultán Bahádur had sent away with his harem and treasures to Makkah. He made Khudáwand Khán the younger brother of Asaf Khán minister of the general departments and confirmed Afzal Khán Bunyáni who was also a minister of the late Sultán Bahádur in his place, and exalted his rank and honours. Although Afzal Khán had no hand in the management of petty affairs, yet the great affairs of the kingdom were never carried out without his advice and consultation. The Sultán also raised the rank of each noble according to his circumstances, services and loyalty. Among these was the noble Sayad Mubárak, the fountain of blessings, who enjoyed the coronet of nobility as well as the mitre of sanctity, and whose mention I shall, God willing, make after that of Sultán Ahmed. The Sultán also promoted Abúji Gujartái to very high rank and ennobled him with the title of Násir-ul-Mulk. He gave Abdul Karím Khán the title of I'timád Khán. This man was the object of the Sultán's confidence, and enjoyed his trust to an extent equalled by none. The Sultán used to take him by the hand and lead him to his harem, and order him to perform services with respect to the dress and ornaments of his ladies though the jealousy of the Sultán was such a ruling trait in his character that if he saw two of his concubines smiling at each other he used to kill them both. With all this he used to entrust I'timád Khán with such services, and the poor man used ever to be quaking and trembling with fear and used to say, "I am but human, God forbid that this practice may lead to an event which may cost me my head." To guard against such accidents when going to the harem of the palace he used to wear below his usual nether garments a pair of steel ring mail-trousers with the trouser string secured by a small padlock, the key of which he used to leave at home. On his return home from the palace he used take the key and open the padlock. When after a long time the Sultán became acquainted with these circumstances, he said : "I'timád Khán why do you put yourself to all this trouble ? I have more confidence in you than that. Why should you have done this ? I conjure you by my head do not act so after this." When he was enjoined by such strong oaths I'timád Khán took several cups of kaththá,¹ which is a destroyer of virile powers, and became totally impotent. It is said, while in great favor with the Sultán, that one day when the court was assembled, I'timád Khán came and whispered something to the Sultán. The courtiers and ministers looked significantly at each other. The meeting then broke up and the statesmen dispersed each to his house. The next day and for six or seven consecutive days no one attended the Sultán's ante-chamber. The Sultán wondered whether all his ministers had fallen ill together. At length it appeared that illness was not the cause of their non-appearance. On enquiry they explained : "We carried on the duties of ministers as long as we could; now when we see we have no confidence, we withdraw." The Sultán asked them to give their reasons. "It is," said they, "degrading to us that the Sultán should be whispered to by others in our presence and ministers like us enjoying so little of trust can do but little. The Sultán might give the post whomsoever he can trust better. If not, the Sultán may talk as he wishes in private but should not do so in public." From that day the Sultán apologized and agreed never again to break the rule nor suffer any one to do so. The Sultán ennobled Áká Arslán, originally a Turk from Balkh, by the title of Imád-ul-Mulk, and conferred on him honors and rank. This Arslán was a purchased slave of the Sultán's. The Sultán ennobled the son of Khudávand Khán Rúmi, who was killed in the port of Diu, with the title of Rúmi Khán. He also ennobled one of his own house-born slaves with the title of Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, and made him captain of the Mughal soldiers. He divided his forces according to tribal divisions and conferred the command of each division on a leader of that tribe. He gave the command of the Dakhanis to Hasan Khán Dakhani. He promoted Fateh Khán Balúch and granted him great possessions. He thus brought the soldiers and nobles so completely into subjection that no one could disobey or rebel against him.

¹ Forbes describes kaththá as "the vegetable astringent extract which natives eat with the betel leaves to neutralize the sharp qualities of the chunam or quicklime which they plaster the leaf with." It is the produce of a species of mimosa (Chadira) Catechu, Terra Japonica." It is used in the form of a potion, as is also used the sap of the plantain-tree to destroy the virile powers.

After this the desire of conquering the country of Málwa entered the Sultán's mind. He took counsel with Ásaf Khán Vazír. Ásaf Khán said : " I shall show you how to come by a country not less, possibly, more important than Málwa. The fourth part of your proper dominions is enjoyed under the name of "wántá" by Rájput girásíás (or landholders). These estates comprise lands which can support a standing army of 25,000 horse. These lands, if resumed from the Rájputs, would increase the army and bring the conquest of Málwa within the range of easy feasibility." The Sultán listened to this counsel and began to attend to the Girás Jágirs. The Girásíás of Ídar and Sirohi, Dúngarpúr, Bánswára, Lúnáwára, Ráj-pípla, and the banks of the Mahí and Dohad, betaking themselves to the villages of the frontier, commenced to disturb the country. The Sultán began to strengthen the frontier posts by establishing one at Sirohi, another at Ídar, and at the places named. In a short time neither name nor sign of Koli or Rájput remained in the country, except those that actually worked at the plough, and these, too, were known by being branded on the right arm, and if any Rájput or Koli was found without the brand-mark he was killed.

The laws and precepts of Islám were so strongly enforced in the time of this Sultán that no Hindu could ride on horseback in the city. The dress of a Hindu was not complete without his binding a piece of red cloth round his sleeve. Hindu usages and customs, like the obscene rites of the Holi, the evil ceremonies of the Diváli, and the worship of idols could not be practiced openly. After the martyrdom of the Sultán the Grásíás got hewed out of stone the image of the vile Burhán, the Sultán's murderer, and setting it up as a guardian deity, began to pay it divine worship, saying : " This is our saviour who has saved us from destruction and starvation. For, had the conditions under which we were living lasted one year more, hunger and privation would have given our lives to the winds of destruction."

THE NAMES OF THE GREAT MASHÁIKHS (HOLY PERSONS) WHO LIVED DURING THE REIGN OF SULTÁN MEHMÚD.

The Sayads of Bitwa derive their extraction from Kutbi Álam Sayad Burhánuddín, the son of Sayad Mehmúd, the son of Makhdúm Jeháníáu. Sayad Ar'shah was in a direct line descended from him. Sayad Sálíh Muhammad, known as Sayad Cháoji, and Sayad Ázmatulláh, the second Kutub, were at the fourth remove connected with the above saint, and Sayad Husein was fifth in descent from Hazrat Kutb, with his cousins, Sayad Táhir Muhammad and Sayad Pir Muhammad, and Sayad Háfiz Muhammad, who were all saints of their time. And of great Sayads was Amir Sayad Sháh Kamál, and his father Mir Sayad Sháh Mirza. And there was Sayad Akram Aázam, the son of Ádam Álam, who, though advanced in years, was indefatigable in search after the knowledge of religion and the positive sciences. He was a descendant of Sayad Usmán, who was one of the deputies of Kutbul Aqtáb, Sayad Burhánuddín, who had honoured him with the title of "Sham-í-Burhání" (i.e., the Light of Burhán). The village of Usmánpúr to the north-west of Ahmedábád was founded by him, and his tomb in that suburb is well known. Sultán Mehmúd had great faith in Sayad Álam as a spiritual guide and teacher. Sayad Álam departed this life in the month of the first Jamád in the year H. 963 (A. D. 1555), Peace be on him !

Another holy man was Sheikh-Aláh-dál, the Resigned in Providence. Then there was Sheikh Is-hák, who was very scrupulous in his obedience to the law of Islám. There was also Sheikh Maudúd, son of Kázi Ílmuddín. Then there was Sayad Rájá and Sheikh Ali the Pious, and Sheikh Muhammad Ghaus, a holy man of the Shuttáriah order, who traced his succession in the mystic order to which he belonged to the great saint Sheikh Báyzíd Bustámi, one of the first mystics of the faith. Then there was the very learned Wajíhuddín-al-Álawi, then Khwájah Ábdul Wáhid, and Sheikh Hasan, the son of Áziz, from the Máwará-un-nahr (the country beyond the Oxus) from a village of the name of Miánkál. Then there was Sheikh Máh from Jaunpúr. Then Sheikh Jamál, one of the Sayads of the town of Banthari in the Dakhan. Then Miyánji, the deputy, in an unbroken line from Sayad Husein and Bibi Áráw, who are enshrined outside the city of Pattan.

There were, besides, many Sayads at Broach, chief of whom was Sayad Ghiásuddín, and in the port of Súrat was Sheikh Kamáluddín, who was a follower of Sayad Ali Hamadání.

The Sultán had great faith in the sanctity of pious persons and saints, and not only did he maintain intact the endowments they enjoyed from the times of the former Sultáns, but bestowed new ones on those of them who came from foreign lands and settled in his kingdom, whom he considered deserving of favour.

ACCOUNT OF THE GENEROSITY, LAUDABLE VIRTUES AND QUALITIES OF THE SULTAN, ON WHOM BE PEACE AND FORGIVENESS !

It is related by respectable people, contemporaneous with the Sultán, that he was a great friend of the poor, and took great interest in their condition, having built houses and asylums for them, and deputed servants thereon to take care and watch over their joys and sorrows, and provide for their needs and necessities. If at any time the Sultán approved of any dish, he asked his servants to provide such food for the poor 'fakírs.' If the servants said it was out of question to provide such rich food for the fakírs he used to order a large quantity of such food to be prepared at once and given to the poor. In the cold weather he used to get thousands of good coats prepared and to send them to people of probity and rectitude living in mosques and colleges, and used also to give quilted sheets and counterpanes for night covering. When he heard that some of the ill-conditioned ne'er-do-weals sold them, he ordered very large-sized quilts to be made so that they may cover a number of persons, and that this community of interest should prevent their being sold. He ordered large piles of fuel to be placed in every street and lane, so that the poor may kindle fires, and the destitute should sit by those fires and warm themselves in the streets. He had also ruled that the fruit of every season—like sugarcane, plantains, mangoes, and melons—should be sent to the poor before being brought to the royal court. When he had such kindness for the common poor, it may be imagined what great interest he must be taking in the Sayads and men of merit and spiritual excellence. Many Sayads of the blood of that Sun of sanctity Sayad Abú Bakr-al-Eidrús (on whom be God's mercy!) and others attracted by kindness of the Sultán, severed their connection with their native land of Arabia and came and settled at Ahmedábád (A. D. 1544-45). God Almighty forgive his sins and pass over his faults for the sake of Muhammad, and his children, and his companions—Amen! Lord of the Universe!

It is related that a Musalmán peasant once came to the Sultán, and told him that he was a father of a family of girls, and had not the means to marry them; that he had seen the Prophet (on whom be peace!) in a dream, and that the Prophet had told him, that he had ordered Sultán Mehmúd to give him a hundred and twenty-five thousand tánkahs, and by this sign that the Sultán said a hundred thousand prayers of blessings and peace, for the soul of the Prophet every day. The Sultán said: "The gold that thou wantest, I shall give thee, but the sign that thou givest is not truthful." The poor man replied: "I only say what I heard from the lips of the 'Friend of God'." It so happened that the Sultán also subsequently saw the Prophet in a dream, and was told by him that what the man had stated to him was a fact, and that the blessings the Sultán sent him once every day had a thousand rewards, being worded as follows: "God Almighty, bless Muhammad, according to the number of the lives of thy creation, &c." Next morning the Sultán called the man and showed him much honour, and besides giving him what he had demanded, settled a pension on him, God's mercy on him! Some people relate this as having occurred in respect of Sultán Mehmúd Begda.

ACCOUNT OF THE BUILDINGS OF THE DEER PARK—AND OF THE PLEASURES THAT THE SULTÁN ENJOYED THERE.

They say that when the heart of the Sultan was free from the oppression of the nobles, and there remained no thorn in the cushion of his desires, he moved from Ahmedábád to Mehmúdábád in the year H. 953 (A. D. 1546), and made it his capital. He began to construct there lofty buildings to which he gave the name of Ahú-Khánah (Deer-house or park). These buildings extended over an area of six miles in length by three in breadth being of the dimensions of a hippodrome or horse-course.¹ It was a grateful stretch of green at each corner of which he built a palace, the like of which did not exist on the face of the earth. The greater portion of the walls and ceilings of these palaces were gilded, and in front of the gate of each house was a road with shops on both sides, and at the door of each shop sat a pretty girl vending articles of luxury and pleasure, delightful viands or delicate flavoured fruit. On both sides gardens were laid out, the trunks and branches of the trees of which were cased with soft coloured velvets and glittering brocades. In these delightful gardens, the Sultán used to pass his time in the company of gazelle-eyed damsels passing like the sun or the moon from constellation to constellation or from palace to palace, and used to engage himself in the pastime of hunting or shooting. On the days of the I'd the royal elephants and horses were ornamented with rich trappings and jewelry with an elegance which could hardly have been attempted or thought of by any king at any time.

¹ Taking the farsang at an English league. Richardson Sub-voue, Ibní Khaldún (Prolegomena 22). Al Mas-údi (Prairies d'Or Arabic text, I. 378) makes a dhí farakh one of eight miles.

ACCOUNT OF THE ASSASSINATION OF THE SULTÁN BY BURHÁN, THE VILE.

It is related that during the days of the Nativity of the Prophet (on whom be peace!) from the first day of Rabi-'ul-Awwal to the twelfth, the learned and pious men of the city used to present themselves before the Sultán every day from the morning till one quarter of the day, and used to read the Holy volumes of the Traditions of the Prophet recorded by Bukhári.¹ After this, food prepared as an offering for the good of the pure soul of the chief of the Prophets (on whom be peace!) used to be served with all honour before the holy men present, and they used, after partaking of it, to return to their respective homes. On the twelfth, the Sultán himself used personally to wait on them, pouring out water from the ewor held by himself on their hands, the basin being circulated by his great ministers. The nobles, in attendance, served the food on the tablecloth. Believing this to be a banquet to the soul of the Prophet (on whom be peace!) the Sultán used to wait at it on foot, calling all the while for blessings in a gentle voice on the Prophet's soul. After the distribution of perfumes, he used to bestow on his pious guests gold and clothes enough to last them one year if they lived to appear at the next banquet of the Nativity. The dishes were laid on pieces of rich Dakhán (Himrús) or striped silks and other fine fabrics intended for the Sultán's own ward-robe. After serving as table-cloths at these banquets, the pieces were washed, and the Sultán's annual stock of clothes cut out therefrom for the year's wear. This pious custom had become an established institution from the time of Sultán Muzaffar, the son of Sultán Mahmúd Begda, but Sultán Mahmúd used to improve upon, and exceed in it in everything. The twelfth day of the first Rabi', being the birthday of the Prophet (on whom be prayers and peace!) is by the Arabs called the Maulúd. Other nations on another and more mystic principle call it the Akás or nuptials, it being the day on which the loving soul of the Prophet passed away to unite itself with its Beloved—Alláh. The Prophet hath said: "He who celebrates with joy the passing away of the month of Safar (the month previous to the first Rabi'), verily I congratulate him with having won a right to Paradise." Every lover of Alláh the bird of whose soul leaves the cage of life on this day, obtains union with the Beloved (Alláh). On this day, after the learned men had finished the reading of the Holy Bakhárá, and the viands of many kinds prepared for them were brought and placed before them and after they had partaken of these and the delicious fruits provided for them they raised their hands in thanksgiving to the Almighty and prayers for the Sultán, and it seemed as if the glory of martyrdom and Divine forgiveness shortly afterwards obtained by the Sultán were the direct results of these prayers. The Sultán, according to his wont, gave them gold and cloth, and retired to his own chamber, and from the fatigue and weariness that had come over him, after the day's work, he lay down and slept. After a short time feeling thirsty he called for a drink of water. Barháń, the ill-fated wretch of evil stock, who was probably biding his time, was present. He brought a poisoned draught and the Sultán unsuspecting of treachery, drained the poisoned cup and again dropped into sleep. After a while, feeling very hot, he awoke and became very sick. He now began to see that he was seriously ill, and said: "Thou wretch! what was this draught thou hast given me." Barháń said: "Fear not, Refuge of the world, it is only the fatigue of the day's work that has overcome you; go to sleep again, so that it may be dispelled." One watch of the night had passed, when the Sultán again went to sleep, when that twice-cursed wretch drove the dagger into his neck and made the Sultán a martyr.

¹ The Bukhári, or as it is respectfully styled, the Bukhári 'Sharif is the most authentic and the largest collection of the traditions of the Prophet (on whom be peace!) Next to it in authenticity is held the Muslim. Both the works are named from their collators.

Account of Burhán, and how that ill-fated one entered the Sultán's service, and the fore-sightedness of Afzal Khán in the matter.

I have heard from the respectable people of Gujarát (may Heaven guard the country from all calamity!), who were themselves eye-witnesses of these events or had received accounts of them directly from their ancestors, that the commencement of the fortunes of the wretch Burhán was as follows:—Burhán's father, Pyará, a man of mean origin, was in the menial service of the Sultán. The most exalted rank Pyará ultimately attained to was the superintendentship of the *Bárgír*¹ stables. His son Burhán was a youth not wholly devoid of comeliness, and the Sultán saw him one day and liked him and for two reasons: First, because the Sultán was in those days in the power of his ministers and could do nothing without their knowledge. All his desires lay pent up within him. Even after he gained power and began openly to indulge in pleasure, charms even the most mediocre in men or women, used to fascinate him. Secondly, because from the beginning to the end of his reign it was a trait of this Sultán's character to incline to men of mean origin and low descent. He always acted thus, and promoted men of low birth, as has been mentioned. He promoted the ill-starred Burhán in the same way, and appointed him his shoebearer. One day Afzal Khán, the minister, saw him cleaning the Sultán's shoes, and asked whose son he was. Some of those present said he was the son of Pyará, the superintendent of stables. The Minister remonstrated with the Sultán against his sudden and unmerited exaltation of the boy to such high rank, but the Sultán said the boy was his houseborn slave, and that he was sure he would never be deceitful or treacherous towards him. The Minister said he discerned evil in his eye, and that he saw that his physiognomy, God forbid, omened harm to the Sultán: but the Sultán insisted no wrong would come out of him. There always remained a difference of opinion between the Sultán and his Minister regarding the ill-fated boy. When the vile wretch reached the prime of youth he gave himself up to sodomy and wine. As these two crimes are strongly interdicted by the Law of Islam, and their perpetrator liable to punishment, the Sultán had ordered that whosoever from among his ministers or nobles should be found guilty of them, his house should be given up to plunder. As the unhappy Burhán was fated to commit both these crimes and had made them his daily practice, the Sultán was one day informed of them and ordered that the wretch should be built up alive in a wall. His parents went wailing and weeping to Afzal Khán, the Minister, praying that Burhán was their only child and entreating him to intercede for his life for the sake of God. The Khán was moved, and going up to the Sultán begged for the life of Burhán, and his prayer was granted, though not a moment too soon, for had he delayed a moment in obtaining the pardon, Burhán would have been killed, as they had already built him up to his shoulders in the wall. As, however, the Divine mandate had gone forth that the Sultán should suffer by the hands of this ill-fated one, he was saved. It is also remarkable that with all his foresight and wisdom and deep-rooted dislike for the boy, that Afzal Khán should have been the means of saving the life of this cause of evil. Afzal Khán was, however, always full of trouble and anxiety on his account, and did not approve of this ill-starred one being in attendance on the Sultán both in his private and public moments. He also did not like the presence of the young man at the State councils of the ministers. So he pretended a little deafness, and said he did not know whether it was from debility consequent on old age or from some adventitious causes, but he was afraid there was something wrong with his powers of hearing. That he was unable to catch anything said in a low tone of voice and as a person suffering from deafness is also given to speak loudly, he said it was advisable that Burhán should not be present at the royal councils, as it was probable that the weighty secrets discussed there should go out and their revelation cause disturbance. They used from that time to exclude him on certain occasions, but that treacherous person did not let a single consultation pass without somehow or other obtaining knowledge of it. One day the Sultán said:—"Our ancestors (may God have mercy on them), after they brought the country of Gujarát within their power, conquered the forts of the Hindus, such as Chámpáner and Júnágadh. Now, thanks be to God, much more than that has passed into the hands of the servants of this state. Let us think of the conquest of Chámpáner. How much army properly equipped is required for the expedition, and what treasure." At this time the ill-fated Burhán was present, and this order of the Sultán's gave him the cue wherewith he worked out his nefarious end and he did what he did.

¹ The Bár-gírs were horsemen serving on personal stipends, their horses being found them by the State.

It is related that Burhán was very fond of the son of a singer, and on account of his great love for him always kept him by his side. One day, the Sultán was engaged with his harem in hunting in the Deer-park of Mehmúdabád when this ill-fated one was seen under very objectionable circumstances with the singer's son under the shade of a tree with a bottle of wine by his side, obli vious of the possibility of the Sultán's passing that way. It so happened that the Sultán had let loose a hawk after a bird, and that bird took the direction where this ill-fated one was, and the Sultán came in pursuit, and having ocular demonstration of what was going on under that tree, said:—"Son of adultery ! I did not believe what people said about thee, now I have seen with my own eyes ; if God wills, I shall give thee condign punishment." Saying these words, he followed the bird. The wretch having once experienced the weight of the Sultán's displeasure, thought he would not escape alive this time. He began to think of a remedy. Then the thought that he should kill the Sultán before he could kill him, came to him. As the influence and position of the vile wretch had reached such a pitch that all the articles of the Sultán's food and drink and intoxicating drugs were in his keeping sealed with his seal, the idea of poisoning the Sultán dawned upon his mind as the most feasible plan of escaping from the consequences of the Sultán's wrath. The morning following the night on which the Sultán saw him in that evil state, was the 12th of the month of Rabi-úl-awwal, the birthday of the Prophet and his re-union with his loved Creator. The Sultán, according to his wont, used to be engaged every day from the 1st of the first Rabi to the 12th of that month in the sevice of the Sheikhs. So he forgot all about the evil conduct of Burhán, witnessed by him during the chase on the 11th of the aforesaid month. On the 12th of that month the Sultán was the whole day on his feet in the entertainment of the Sheikhs. After the conclusion of the entertainment, when the Sultán bade adieu to the Sheikhs, he retired to his chamber, and, seeing Burhán present, asked for some intoxicating drink or drug. Burhán went and brought a confection and jar of water, both mixed with poison. The Sultán ate of that poisoned drug and drank of the poisoned water and went to sleep. After a while the Sultán felt indisposed and became sick, and said: "Oh wretch ! What sort of drug is this, and what sort of water? What hast thou given me?" The ill-fated wretch came forward and said, "Oh Refuge of the world, you have for the last two days been fatiguing yourself, and that has touched your Majesty's brain. There is nothing to be afraid of, eat a little more of the confection and seek repose." The Sultán did so and went to sleep, not to rise till the dawn of the Day of Doom. In addition to all this when the Sultán went to sleep, the wretch ran his knife across his throat, and made him a martyr, and earned for himself eternal damnation.

Since the treacherous thought of seating himself on the throne of Gujarát had entered and hatched in his brain, he killed several ministers and nobles, the pillars of the State, in that night, and in the morning proposed fearlessly to disclose his fell intent, and making the discussion of the plan for the conquest of Chámpáner his pretext, he began to think to what class of people to attach himself. There was a troop of men called "Bájj-máts" or tiger-slayers. It consisted of one thousand two hundred strong, being formed in the reign of the late Sultán of blessed memory. They were directly under the orders of the Sultán, without the intermediacy of any minister or noble. He sent for some of the leaders of this band and concealed them in a chamber, enjoining them in the name of the Sultán to cut down every one, noble or simple, who should enter that room. He said he would, in reward for this service, make them independent for life. Having given these instructions he came out and sent a man to fetch Ásaf Khán, the prime minister, who for firmness of purpose and soundness of judgment was so distinguished, that had Ásaf,¹ the son of Baráchia been alive he would have been unworthy to hold a candle to him. Burhán instructed the man to tell Ásaf Khán that he was directed by the King to say that it was a long time he had ordered him to arrange a meeting for the discussion of the conquest of Chámpáner, but that nothing had been done. That the King had assembled all the ministers for a consultation regarding that business, and they were waiting for him. Ásaf Khán got up immediately on hearing these words and followed the man. When he came to the Palace the base plotter ran down to him, and saluted him, and said, "My dear Diván (minister) his Majesty has convened all the ministers to at once arrange and reduce to a workable form the proposal for the conquest of Chámpáner." Saying so, he led him to that room.

¹ The Giáni minister of King Solomon.

When Asaf Khán saw a number of people sitting in that room, he believed the story of that false, faithless, traitor, and unsuspectingly entered the room to be immediately cut down by three of the braves inside. In this way twelve of the great ministers and famous nobles of Gujarát (of whom, had even one survived, the Kingdom of Gujarát would not have passed out of the hands of the Gujarátis) were killed at one place and in one night.

To continue: When Burhán sent a man to fetch Afzal Khán, Afzal said to his messenger: "Thou speakest not the words of the Sultán, and the Sultán does not call people at this time of the night; thou talkest nonsense." The man returned and communicated the words of the Khán to the traitor. He again sent the man with a pretended message purporting to be from Ásaf Khán, and stating: "This conduct of yours is not good. The more I incline towards you, the more you hold yourself back. At any rate you must come now as the ministers and nobles have all assembled and are waiting for your arrival to decide on the conquest of Chámpánir." When the Khán again tried to excuse himself, his wife objected, saying, "When the king wishes your presence, why do you hold back?" He said, "Oh simpleton! the man's words smell of blood, and I am sure the message the man delivers is not from the tongue of the Díván. If you do not want me to live press me to go, for the words of the man are not devoid of artifice and guile. But the Khán's wife insisted, yet the Khán did not go. Meanwhile, the traitor sent a third message to him saying, that the Sultán said, that if the Khán did not come, that he (the Sultán) would go to him, as all the assembly was waiting for him to come. Still the Khán wanted to send an excuse, but his wife, and Shirwán Khán Bhatti, whom he had adopted as a son, and exalted in rank, came and pressed him to go, saying that if he did not go the Sultán would be offended. The Khán however told them that he smelt treachery, yet agreed to go as they pressed him so hard. He then sent for all his children and followers and took his last farewell of them, and having asked for their forgiveness he went and sat in his palanquin. When he reached the palace, the traitor came to meet him and as shortly ere this there had been a little estrangement between Afzal Khán and the Sultán, though no important business was settled without Afzal Khán's consent, he thought perhaps the Khán would be pleased to hear of the assassination of the Sultán. So advancing, he said in a coaxing way: "Dear Khán, God Almighty has removed the enemies; if, therefore, you only give me a helping hand, the whole of the country of Gujarát will come under your rule without a partner." When Afzal Khán heard these words, he said: "Oh wretch! oh son of adultery! what is it you are thinking of? I smell blood from your words, thou accursed one be quick and show me my master!" He said, "Oh Khúnji! you always suspect me of evil. What have I done to your master, come along, your master is seated in this room with a number of the nobles in council." The Khán, a man of a pure soul and excellent qualities, went into the room and the accursed ones made him a martyr. And now, this wretch was entirely at ease. He donned the royal garments, and having sent for the party of his braves he broke the padlock of the Sultán's jewel-room which was full of precious stones, and gave them skirtsfull of jewels, and the special riding horses of the Sultán, and promised to advance them all to the rank of nobles in the morning. When two or three hours of the night remained, he dismissed them all by the wicket, and said, "Whoever does not join us I shall give over his house to plunder. I shall then send for the learned men and get the Khutbah (sermon) to be read and the coin to be struck in my name."

Shirwán Khán Bhatti, who had sent Afzal Khán (to his death) by his persistence, remained with his family waiting for his return. At dawn, he issued out of his house to obtain news as to what had happened. When he arrived at the head of the lane leading to the Bazár, he heard the tumult of the Sultán's approach in State and thinking it was veritably the Sultán he began to dismount to salute him. But it was Burhán, who called out to him in a loud voice, "Shirwán Khán! do not alight from your horse, but let the office of Afzal Khán, and his titles be auspicious to you!" Shirwán Khán at once gathered what was meant by these words. He tried to advance towards him, but the band that surrounded him would not suffer him to do so. Burhán, however, said, "Shirwán Khán is one of us, let him come that he may kiss my feet." On hearing this speech of the traitor, the fire of wrath blazed up in the heart of Shirwán Khán. He rode up to him and making his horse curvet slightly dealt him such a sword cut on the waist as cleft him in twain and he fell from his horse. The company of Tiger-slayers that formed his retinue dispersed. Some of them fled, taking their wives and families with them, and some of them were made to follow that accursed one to hell. There fell a panic and confusion in the city, nobody knew what the night big with events would bring forth, until the break of dawn when all the nobles with Shirwán Khán assembled in the house of Itimád Khán and all unanimously went to the palace and first took charge of the treasure and handed it over to a responsible person. They then went to the king's private chamber and saw the Sultán lying dead and all present could not restrain their tears. Going to the other chamber they saw the mangled bodies of the nobles and ministers. They committed to the dust the mortal remains of the Sultán, on whom be God's mercy! in the mausoleum of Sultán Mehmúd Begda, which is at the foot of the domed tomb of the chief of Saints, Sheikh Ahmed Khattú, and the bodies of the nobles and ministers were conveyed to their own resting places and buried.

¹ A portion of the text next following, being only a repetition of the above account, is omitted.

These events occurred at Mehmudábád, on Friday night, the 13th of the month of the first Rabi in the year H. 961 (A. D. 1554). The Sultán was ten years old when he mounted the throne of the kingdom, and reigned eighteen years, and was killed in the twenty-eighth year of his age. The letters of the words Hakikun-bish-Shahádat, the worthy of martyrdom, form a good chronograph of the event. Sheikh Yahya the Mufti has also composed the two following poetical date scripts :—

When from this world king Mehmúd turned his face,
And passing straight to paradise his banners there unfurled,
Amidst his faithful ministers and with his martyr throng
He reigns supreme in heaven with his regal umbrella spread over him.
I asked of myself the year and date of his departure.
The answer was : oh! Yáhyá hear !
The King has gained a martyr's crown. (Sultán Shahádat Yáftah).

The following is the date-script of the three kings who died in this same year :—

Three monarchs did the self same year expire,
Kings who by their justice had made the land of Ind a heaven.
The first was Mehmúd, lord of Gujarát fair,
Who like his Fortune was in prime of youth.
The second was Islám Sháh, the Dehli King,
Who did in Ind possess imperial power.

The third was Nizám-ul-Mulk Bahri,
 Who like a Chosroes o'er Dakhan land held sway.
 If you do ask the year of their deaths,
 It is : the death of rulers Great and Kings (Faut-i-Khusrawán).¹

They say that Burhán had sent for P'timád Khán also, but that P'timád Khán thinking that it was too late and untoward an hour of the night for him to be summoned by the Sultán, suspected some evil and was too sagacious to go.

Others of the people of Gujarát have related that when Burhán was satisfied of his success in killing the exalted King, he became secure and happy and fancied himself the centre of popular hopes and expectations. He extended his hands towards the property of the Sultán and donned the royal garb on his vile body and unclasping the jewelled necklace from the handsome neck of the deceased Sultán he bound it round his own, and like a dog seated himself on one after another of all the jewelled chairs of the Sultán. He pulled before himself the gold basin of the Sultán and began to perform his toilet. Then he set to ape at government, bestowing the royal steeds with their gold and silver housings and bridles on his accomplices and gave orders to release the prisoners. The small number of the hungry and needy men who had joined him owing to the pressure of poverty, when they saw that this would not last till the morning, with one mind, took the horses and gold bestowed on them and took to flight. The ill-fated Burhán was left to enjoy his state with a small number of his friends. In the meantime the terrible news began to spread among the people and reached the ears of the state counsellors such as Imád-ul-Mulk who commanded the Turks and Jhujhár Khán and Alif Khán Habashi, the captains of the Abyssinian guards. They writhed with pain, like a hair on fire, and taking at once to horse proceeded to the royal palace. It is related that a panic like that of the Day of Resurrection fell on the city. On reaching the place these nobles secured the treasury, placed it in charge of a body of trusty Arabs, and turned to punish the accursed Burhán. It so happened that the accursed one also, with some men, who had joined him, went forth. Shirwán Khán Bhatti, who was one of the great nobles of the late Sultán, was seen by him approaching from an opposite direction. The doomed Burhán called out to Shirwán Khán, saying, "Come,

¹ A portion of the text next following, being only a repetition of the above account, is omitted.

Shirwán Khán, you are in the nick of time, I shall enrich you for life." Shirwán Khán said: "I come!" and spurring his horse forward dealt Burhán such a blow on the shoulder with his sabre as to kill him at once and send him to jahannam, whither his companions also were made shortly to follow him by being mercilessly sabred. This happened in A. H. 961 (A. D. 1554). They say that this rascal used outwardly to conduct himself with such piety, that the Sultán used sometimes to make him his leader in prayers. One day the Sultán sent Burhán at the head of a party of body servants to arrange for a hunting trip to the strip of land lying between Cambay and Dholka. On the return of the party Burhán went to Dholka and passed the night swilling toddy in the company of low singing women. When the Sultán came to Dholka one of the servants told him what had happened. The Sultán indignantly said: "Base cur! I considered thee a man of piety and prayed in thy leading, and thou hast proved thyself such a hypocrite. Thou deservest again to be built up in a wall." Burhán had more than once ere this tasted the horrors of being built up in a wall and was, when at his last gasp, begged off by some of the king's associates. The wretch knew that if he again received this punishment it would be his last. Hence his determination to kill the Sultán.

They say that a qalandar had foretold Burhán his future, saying, that one day the royal umbrella of Gujarát would be unfurled over his head. This baneful augury remained ever since working in Burhán's foolish head till it brought him to this ignominious end. But God knows best.

ACCOUNT OF THE NOBLES WHO, AFTER THE DEATH OF THE SULTAN OF BLESSED MEMORY, ADMINISTERED THE GOVERNMENT OF THE COUNTRY.

It is related that when the Sultán became a martyr and his chief ministers and nobles also obtained the crowns of martyrdom, the only one of the great nobles who lived to be the cause of the peace and prosperity to the country and the people was the holy and exalted personality of Sayad Mubáarak, may God exalt his glory! He used to keep up a wonderfully strong army and great state. His army consisted chiefly of Bukhári Sayads of the same extraction and fraternity as himself besides Fauládi Patháns, whose chiefs, Músa Khán and Sher Khán, were famed for valour. The Sayad used to pay them great respect and attention, and they also on their side used to behave as his sincere and loyal spiritual followers. There was also a troop of Afgháns of the Lodi and Shirwáni tribes, like Shah-báz Khán and others, who were brave and strong in battle. Of the sons of Sheikhs the most beloved of His Holiness the Sayad was Sheikh Muhammad alias Sheikh Manjhú, the father of this humble person the writer who, in secular matters, was his agent, and in matters spiritual one of his chief followers. If I were to relate all the miracles and deeds of the Sayad it would fill a volume. Hereafter, if occasion offers, I may write a little regarding it if God wills. In short, there were all classes of men in my lord's service. There were in his service nearly ten thousand horsemen so effective and brave, that if they had to do battle with an enemy consisting of a rock of fire they would assail him with the metttled power of their scimitars, or if the enemy opposed to them consisted of a boisterous sea they would swallow him down like a bowl of water.

The next leading noble—the support and refuge of the other nobles—was I'timád Khán, who, at the time of the assassination of the Sultán, was carrying on the duties of prime minister and regent. The next was Inád-ul-Mulk Rúmi, who had under him a strong and well equipped body of Turks.

Another noble of exalted rank was Alif Khán Habashi. Then there was Malik-ush-Shark Gujaráti and Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, the chief slave-noble of the Sultán. All these the Sayad brought round and reconciled with one another according to the (Kuránic) command "take counsel in all your affairs." They consulted and took counsel together in state affairs. They asked of I'timád Khán, who was a repository of the Sultán's secrets, to tell them if the late Sultán had any male issue. If so, they proposed that he should be raised to the throne and administer the kingdom of his ancestors. If there were no male issue, but if any of the ladies of the Sultán's harem were pregnant, that they would wait till her accouchement. Perchance Heaven may vouchsafe a son, so that the exalted rule of the Sultánate may not pass out of the glorious line of Sultán Mehmúd of blessed end. I'timád Khán said that the Sultán had no male issue nor was he aware of any of his ladies being with child. Then the nobles proceeded to select a suitable heir from among the Sultán's kinsmen who should be fit for the dignity and honour of the throne. They proposed Ahmed Khán, saying he was the only one of the Sultán's relatives worthy the honour of royalty, and they resolved to send for him despatching Razi-ul-Mulk to fetch him. Razi-ul-Mulk drove away in a horse-chariot with such lightning speed that he reached Ahmedábád in less than two hours. When he arrived before Ahmed Khán's house he saw that prince standing before a Banyá's shop his skirt full of some millet which he had just purchased to feed his pigeons. Razi-ul-Mulk alighting from his chariot invited Ahmed Khán into the vehicle, and seating him therein turned round and drove away. The nurse of the Khán set up a great wailing and crying: "Who is this man and where and why does he take my prince. They told her that he was being taken to a place where to-morrow crowds should kick their heels before his ante-chamber dying to gain but unable to obtain admission. In short, they took him thus to Mehmúdábád.

ACCESSION OF SULTAN AHMED SHAH II., SON OF LATIF KHAN, AND GRANDSON OF SULTAN AHMED I., THE FOUNDER OF AHMEDABAD.

It is related by historians and writers of annals that the Sultán was seated on the throne of the Kingdom of Gujarát at Mehmudábád between the two prayers¹ on the 15th of the month of the first Rabi' in the year A. H. 961 (A. D. 1553) with the unanimous consent of the nobles with the title of Ahmed Shah II. and by the auspicious hand of Sayad Mubarak.

COUPLET.

It was when sixty-one years had passed over nine hundred
That Fate said to the King Ahmed—"The kingdom is thine!"

On the same day the King was initiated as a spiritual disciple of Sayad Mubarak.

After the throne of Gujarát was adorned by the accession of this king, it was agreed among the nobles that as he was of tender years they should divide the country and the treasure among themselves and remain each one in his own fief to prevent the possibility of any friction or disturbance. It was suggested that this course was the more desirable, as at this time Islám Sháh, king of Dehli, was dead, and his wife's brother Mamríz Khán having killed his (Islám Sháh's) son Firúz

¹ Between the two prayers—is between the Afternoon and the Vespers or the 4 o'clock and the sunset prayers, the 'Asar and Maghrib.

Firúz Khán had usurped the throne under the title of Muhammad Sháh A'dil. He was a young and ambitious king who had recently risen to sovereignty and power, and it was possible the conquest of Gujarát might suggest itself to his young mind. It would be best for each one of the nobles to keep his contingent of men ready and remain alert in his estate, while I'timád Khán should carry on the duties of minister and regent and remain near the king.

When the nobles had divided the country and the treasure and the royal elephants and horses, twenty-two millions of Gujarát tánkás, which are equal to twenty-two hundred thousand Akhari tánkás, and gold and gold articles and jewels, fell to the share of his holiness Sayad Mubárák. The agent of the treasurer put all these valuables into teak boxes and brought them locked and sealed to the house of the Sayad, and said that his principal would come to-morrow and count and deliver them over formally. The Sayad rising, looked at all the boxes, and said, that they were all properly locked and sealed. He then asked for a hatchet. One was immediately produced, and he ordered the lock of the boxes to be immediately smashed. At this moment, Muhammad Zainuddín, the treasurer, said, that the contents were up to that time not counted and that the next day his principal would come and count them over and that the matter had best be postponed till then. The Sayad, however, said : Wonderful must the fool be who defers such a matter for the morrow. "A whole night," said he, "intervenes, and if Mubárák dies during the night, who will divide these monies?" He made a sign to the men to immediately smash the locks. They did so, and made separate heaps of the gold and jewels, while the Sayad occupied himself in saying his noon prayers. After the prayers, he sat on his cushion, with a bow and a small blunt arrow in hand, with which he made signs directing the division. By the time of the afternoon prayers, the Sayad had divided and given away all the gold and jewels among his men. If any one were to collect all the instances of the Sayad's generosity, their narration would require a separate volume. This is but an incident out of many.

To resume :—When Mubárák Sháh, king of As'r and Burhánpúr, heard how the Gujarát nobles had elected Ahmed Sháh as king, and how having consigned him to confinement had divided the country and treasure among themselves and were enjoying themselves, Mubárák Sháh collected an army and set out from his capital for Gujarát.

On learning this the Gujarát nobles taking Ahmedsháh with them sounded the trumpets for a march and issued forth to repel the invasion of Mubárák Sháh. It was agreed that I'timád Khán with Alif Khán Habashi, should attend the victorious stirrups of the Sultán, that some of the nobles should form the right and some the left wing of the army and that the force of Sayad Mubárák should form the van. They went by forced marches and halted at Ráupúr-Kotáh, a village of the district of Broach, about fifteen miles from the city on the bank of the river Narbadá. Mubárák Sháh arrived and encamped on the opposite bank. Nothing but the river intervened between the hostile armies. Násir-ul-Mulk seeing the state of affairs, observed to the nobles of his party, that the issue of the battle depended on Sayad Mubárák. He desired them to do no more than watch the conflict. It was certain he argued, that the kingdom of one of the two belligerents would fall into his hands. One of the two results, calculated this wily reasoner, was bound to happen. Either the Sayad would win or Mubárák Sháh. The party defeated, he concluded, should be considered as destroyed, the victorious side would at any rate become much weakened. Násir-ul-Mulk reasoned he would have the victor at his mercy, and removing him from his way, he hoped by God's help to become master of both, if not one of those two kingdoms. If, thought Násir-ul-Mulk, Mubárák Sháh beats the Sayad, and the Sayad is defeated or haply killed, or if even he lives, he will remain with wings broken and feathers ruffled. Then, hoped Násir-ul-Mulk, he would beat back Mubárák Sháh and the kingdom of Gujarát, without any partner, would fall into his hands a ready prize. Having settled this design with his own men, Násir-ul-Mulk sent a message to Mubárák Sháh stating that all the nobles of Gujarát were agreeable to his wishes to elect him king of Gujarát, except Sayad Mubárák. That if Mubárák Sháh defeated the Sayad alone he would gain his wishes and that all the nobles would go over to him and be his servants. When the Sayad came to know of the machinations of Násir-ul-Mulk, he became desirous of peace and sent a message to Mubárák Sháh, stating, that he was a descendant of the Prophet and that Mubárák Sháh was the offspring of the Commander of the Faithful Al Fúrúk ¹ and that war between them was not meet. That on his own part he, the Sayad, was unwilling to fight, and that if Mubárák Sháh was of the same mind too, they should make peace and help each other. Whatever proposals of peace however the Sayad made failed of effect owing to the previous instigations of Násir-ul-Mulk.

¹ The Khándes kings were the descendants of the second Khalifah and successor of the Prophet, Umar Ibnul Khattáb (A. D. 634-643 II. 13-23) whose surname was Al-Fúrúk or the Separator of injustice from justice, i.e. the Just.

The Sayad then sent for Maulána¹ Rúh-ud-dín, the preceptor of Mubárák Sháh, in whom he had great confidence, and spoke to him about the peace. The Maulána said he too had this wish at heart but that he was not sure his intercession would be successful unless the Sayad sent with him one of his men to join with him in delivering the message, of the result of which he would inform him. My Lord the Sayad ordered my father saying, "Miyán Manjhú! Go you, please, and convey to Mubárák Sháh my message." My father said it was not likely Mubárák Sháh would listen to his words when he did not heed the counsel of Mulla Rúh-ud-dín, who was his religious preceptor and the chief of his nobles and advisers. The Sayad saying: "He will certainly agree to what you will say," repeated the Pátihah (the opening chapter of the Kuráan) and dismissed him. My father with Mulla Rúh-ud-dín went to the court of Mubárák Sháh. The Mulla left my father behind and went to announce, my father to Mubárák Sháh. He was asked what sort of a man my father was. The Mulla returned reply stating my father was "a man of noble appearance and dignified and respectful mien who held the post of agent to the Sayad and was well-known and esteemed among the people of Gujarát." Mubárák Sháh then said, all his nobles and ministers kept standing in his presence and asked what my father proposed to do. The Mulla coming, explained this to my father, who said, that Mubárák Sháh's nobles and ministers were all his dependants and servants, but that my father had come as an emissary from the Sayad and that if he was sent for to the presence he would surely deliver the message he was charged with by the Sayad sitting. If not, my father said, "Mubárák Sháh, should send one of his confidential men to him who might hear his message and deliver it to his master." The Mulla went and told his master that my father was not the sort of man to permit himself to be subjected to such harsh etiquette and my father was called in and having performed all that the rules of courtesy required, was desired to be seated. He then conveyed the blessings and compliments of the Sayad and Mubáruk Sháh asked him to deliver the message of the Sayad. My father said that the object of the Sayad was that there should be peace and that there should be no bloodshed between Musalmáns. Mubáruk Sháh, then said, he had some questions to ask of my father, of which he should first give replies and then deliver himself of his mission. The first question was: "Is the greatness of the Sayads due to their connection with the Prophet, their maternal grand sire or owing to their relationship with Ali, the son-in-law of the Prophet, their paternal ancestor?" My father replied, "Because of their connection with the Prophet." "In that case," said Mubáruk Sháh, "I am also the daughter's son of the Sultán of Gujarát, if nobody remained from his line, then the kingdom of Gujarát by inheritance descends to me. Why then have you passed over a successor of mature age and understanding for a boy? What fault did you find in me?" My father said: "This case exactly resembles the case of Sultán Násir-ud-dín of Dehli." The king asked. "In what manner?" My father replied:—"When the life of Sultán Ghiás-ud-dín of Dehli reached its close, his son Násir-ud-dín was Governor of Bengal and was there and Násir-ud-dín's son, Muízz-ud-dín, was at the capital with his grand-father. Sultán Ghiás-ud-dín, made his testamentary disposition to the ministers and nobles. He told them that the country of India was large and wide and that lest there should be a disturbance ere Sultán Násir-ud-dín should arrive he made over the sovereignty of the country to his grandson in supercession of the claims of his son on whom he confirmed the sovereignty of Bengal. He requested them to obey his grand-son, and be loyal to him in the management of the difficult affairs of the kingdom. They all agreed, some with good will, others with ill-will. After the death of Sultán Ghiás-ud-dín, Sultán Muízz-ud-dín Keikubád was seated on the throne. This news reached Sultán Násir-ud-dín and it did not please him, as Bengal is a subordinate province of Dehli in the same way as Burhánpur is to Gujarát. Sultán Násir-ud-dín collected an army and marched towards Dehli and when Sultán Muízz-ud-dín learned of his father's expedition he also issued from Dehli with an army to oppose him. The father encamped on one of the banks of the river Sarwar and the son did so on the other. Sultán Násir-ud-dín sent a message to his son. Khwájah (Amír) Khusrao¹ who was in the retinue of Sultán Muízz-ud-dín in this expedition, has described what passed between father and son in verse and has given the poem the name of Kirán-us-Saádain (the Conjunction of the two auspicious Stars). Some of the lines containing a substance of the parental message run as follows:—

¹ The word literally means Monseigneur and is applied to people of spiritual excellence or note.

VERSES.

“My son! give up thy hostile thoughts,
Thy scymitar lower for I'm the Sun;
Look not with anger at my prior rights,
For anger holds no place in our code,
How can my Sire's crown go down to thee?
From him I claim't as thou wilt claim from me;
If this design from thine own mind hath sprung,
Turn thee to God in lowly penitence,
But if thy acts from ill-advice proceed,
Then hearken not base interest's venom'd words.
Thou'rt young in years and crude in wisdom's ways,
Thou needest guidance yet for many days.
A child, though clever and wise to high degree,
Is still, a child, though, he² a prophet be”

The reply sent by Sultán Muízz-ud-dín Keikubád to his father ran :—

Quickly to this rebuke the angered king,
Returned like answer by his noble's hand,
A sharp reply he penned,
Sword edged and bitter as the cup of death,
“Oh! thou!” the letter said—“who art
Greater than greatness' self, founder of fame,
The throne I hold is not mine own to give Empire is barren though the fates be big³
With changes. Kingship is no heritage,
Else wert thou my king now. 'Tis gained by valour,

¹ The poetic account written by Amír Khusrao of this meeting is called the Kirán-us-Saádain or the Conjunction of the two auspicious Stars. Ibní Batútah (A. D. 1333) gives (Elliot's History of India, III. 596-97) a more intelligent account of this meeting. He says that the father and son met at Karra on the banks of the Ganges, and that Násir-ud-dín encamped on the Karra side of the river. See also Amír Khusrao's account. Elliot III. 524-25.

² This couplet is a literal rendering of the Arabic saying الصَّبِيُّ صَبِيٌّ وَلَوْ كَانَ نَبِيًّا

“A child, will be a child, though he may be a prophet.”

³ The words, “Dominion is barren” from an old Arabic proverb meaning rather differently from the “Divine right of kings” that there is no heredity in kingdom. The pregnancy of the Heavens is another oriental mode of speech or metaphor. The Easterners ascribe the birth of all events favourable or untoward to the revolution of the skies.

No more a child in one step I have reached,
 Kingdom and manhood both. I am become,
 Great by the call of Allah, have gained the throne
 Of age, though young in years and younger still in fortune."

Let it, began my father, not remain secret from your enlightened mind that empire and kingdom do not go by hereditary succession. They depend on fortune. Heaven has, in this case, decreed dominion for Ahmed Sháh. It, therefore, does not behove you to take objection. Mubárák Sháh said: "If the kingdom was Ahmed Sháh's, why then did you divide among you his horses and elephants and his treasures?" My father said that kingdoms and states depended on the army and when the army was flourishing and prosperous wealth was in its right place. He added: "We feared that Islám Sháh, the king of Dehli, being dead and Muhammad Sháh who had killed his son and successor and usurped the throne being a young ruler and an ambitious and knowing that of all princes he is the only one possessing an army superior to our own, might turn his thoughts to the conquest of Gujarát we made ourselves ready to receive him never dreaming that you would march against us. When the conversation reached this stage, Mubárákshah said to his minister Kámil-ul-Mulk: "He means by these words that they have made preparations to fight the king of Dehli, what power have I to fight them and they do not know that with the exception of Sayad Mubárákshah all the Gujarat nobles are in secret league with me." My father said: "The army opposes the king when it is ill-equipped and down-hearted. Your Majesty may ascertain, that from the time of Sultán Muzaffar I. till the time of Sultán Mahmúd, the Martyr, no king has had so well equipped and large an army. It is, therefore, difficult for so good an army to entertain thoughts of treachery towards its master." The king said: "What, if I show you the petitions of all of them?" My father said: "They must not be written by them, but some evil-disposed persons, who have the habit of writing such letters, when two armies meet, that on both sides dissensions may arise. But such things must not be believed. Had there been any truth in the writings two or three at least of the so-called malcontent nobles must by this time have joined your Majesty. It is surely high time they should have come, for to-morrow the battle is going to take place. When will they come else. These things are the doings of the subordinates and have no weight. The Sayad interferes only for the good and peace of the Mussalmáns. If not, none of the Gujarat nobles have any wish for peace." At this the king became silent. After a time, he told his minister Kámil-ul-Mulk gently to tell the envoy that he had used many hard words in his conversation, but that as he had conveyed them in the style of the wise and the eloquent they had pleased his Majesty and that he agreed to peace. That the envoy was to come and receive the dress of honor and take his leave and that he was to return to-morrow (to Mubárah Sháh's camp), when the king would march away. Kámil-ul-Mulk came and took my father to the corner of the tent and there repeated to him the words of the king and gave him the dress of honour with forty thousand Muzaffaris in cash. My father said he would willingly wear the dress, but that he should be excused the money. Kámil-ul-Mulk went and communicated this to Mubárah Sháh, who asked him to tell my father that the people of Gujarát acknowledged with equal honor the rewards conferred by Sultán Bahádur and his (Mubárahsháh's) brother Muhammadsháh. Why did my father object to their acceptance? My father said that he was acting according to the inclinations of his master, who, in treating his guests always gave away the plate vessels and table-cloths and other things in and on which the banquets were served. That the Sayad never sent back for these articles lest the guest should put himself to the trouble of giving vail money to the servants who went for the articles. "When," said my father, "my master observes this rule for menial servants, I, who am one of his higher servants should certainly have a regard for his wishes." Mubárahsháh highly approved of my father's conduct and dismissed him and he returned to my lord the Sayad and related to him the whole of what had happened. The Sayad was much pleased at the success of my father's mission, and bestowed on my father a horse, an Arab of the name of Táús or the Pea-cock, the pink of the royal stables and a favourite of the late martyred Sultán, after whose death the Sayad had specially begged for and obtained it. He also bestowed on my father a jágir of twenty-five lákhs of Tánkahs,¹ which he asked my father to spend in the rejoicings of the marriage of his sons, and on no other account. In short, the Sayad having informed I'timád Khán and other nobles of peace being concluded, in the morning sent Sayad Háshim and Sayad Mubárah and Sayad Abul Khair Bukhári and my father to Mubárahsháh, to request him to retire as promised which he did. The army of Gujarát also marched back to Ahmedabad. They, however, divided into two parties, one party acknowledged the chiefship of I'timád Khán and allied themselves to him, the other attached themselves to Násir-ul-Mulk and followed him. The Sayad joined the chief of the Gujarát nobles I'timád Khán. Hasan Khán Dakhani, a powerful noble joined neither party. When the army reached its camp from which next day they were to march to Baroda I'timád Khán sent his agents to Hasan Khán and having persuaded him took him to the Sayad's tent. Násir-ul-Mulk also had sent his agent Atak Khán to Hasan Khán to try and win him over to his side, but before Atak Khán reached him Hasan Khán had come to the Sayad. Atak Khán also followed him there and told the Sayad: "It does not become you outsiders to set the nobles one against the other and cause ill-will and disturbance among the people of Gujarát. While Násir-ul-Mulk breathes no one can claim to be the Vazir of Gujarát. Why do you throw yourself into destruction?" asked he, and with these words grasping with one hand the waist of the Sayad he sought his dagger with the other. On this the kinsmen and followers of the Sayad fell on him and would have despatched him had not the Sayad forbade them, saying: "If God wills I will kill this doomed one in the field of battle." The assembly now dispersed, and each one went to his own quarters. On hearing this Násir-ul-Mulk was much moved and said that while the Sayad supported I'timád Khán he would not gain power. "I must" thought he, "play such a game as to destroy the strength of I'timád Khán." This however was not possible without in the first instance crushing the power of the Sayad. After encompassing the Sayad's ruin he calculated, I'timád Khán would fall an easy prey. On the day the army reached the vicinity of the town of Baroda he issued secret orders to the men of his army to remain ready armed. The Sayad being ignorant of this design, his men imperfectly armed, marched on incautiously in one direction. I'timád Khán was at the head of his forces following the Sayad at the distance of a mile. On the other side Násir-ul-Mulk was marching with his men. When they reached the encamping ground Násir-ul-Mulk having joined the other nobles who were intimate with him, stood in the way of my lord the Sayad as he advanced from the other side. Atak Khán, the unfortunate, who was mentioned above, came in the van of the army of Násir-ul-Mulk and began the action by falling on the Sayad's army, but his brave Sayad's drawing their swords defended themselves and killed the wretch and routed his army. At this time Násir-ul-Mulk came up with 30,000 well equipped sabres and a great battle ensued and a number of fine men chiefly the Sayad's kinsmen fell, notable amongst them being Sayad Muzzammil, his younger brother Sayad Hášhim and Sayad Muhammad the brother's sons of the Sayad, and Sayad Muhammad, the son of Sayad Fidá and others. At that time the cavalry of the Sayad did not amount to more than two thousand, his other army being scattered never dreamed of the possibility of such a conflict. I'timád Khán fell short of offering the Sayad any help. How could two thousand half-armed horsemen hold against thirty thousand, well armed and equipped. At last the well wishers of the Sayad, seizing his bridle, led him out of the field and turned his face towards the Khánpúr Wánkúner ford and there crossing the river Mahi went to Kapadwanj which was one of the dependencies of his fief. I'timád Khán avoiding to give battle followed in the Sayad's wake and arrived at Kapadwanj. Many nobles of I'timád's party joined Násir-ul-Mulk. Sultán Ahmed being himself in his power Násir-ul-Mulk returned thence to Ahmedábád in great pomp and circumstance by forced marches and there established himself. His pride and arrogance now reached such a pitch that he did not think much of any of the nobles. He arrested Zeinuddin, the brother of Afzal Khán the minister and fined him and seized and imprisoned and demanded gold of Sadr Khan, brother of Mían Abdus Samad, the counsellor of Sultán Mehmúd, who in those days was appointed (by the nobles) minister of Sultán Ahmed. After two months Násir-ul-Mulk advanced with Sultán Ahmed and with the whole army of Gujarát towards Kapadwanj, with the intention of expelling the Sayad and I'timád Khán from Gujarát and encamped at the village of Kamand, a village of the Ahmedábád division, about fifteen miles from the city. On hearing this news the Sayad and I'timád Khán convoked their well-wishers in counsel. I'timád said he had with him no more than four thousand horse and the enemy was coming at the head of fifty or sixty thousand. To do battle against such odds would, he feared, bring no good. They should, he advised, go to Muhammad Ádil Sháh, King of Dehli. It was agreed that they should go to Dúngarpúr, the frontier of which is contiguous with Gujarát and thence to Dehli. The council unanimously resolved on this. The Sayad got up without saying yea or nay and going inside consulted Bibí Álam Khátún, the wife of Sayad Mírán, son of my lord the Sayad and told her what I'timád and the others had advised.

¹ The Tánkah was $\frac{1}{100}$ of a rupee. See Gazetteer History of Gujarát, Musalmán Period. Vol. I. Part. I., p. 224. Note 2.

The lady said, "Who am I to advise on such a matter, but as you command me I shall say what my heart prompts me to say. You will be pleased to inform me what is your present age?" The Sayad said he was fifty-eight years old. The lady said, "The age to which the children of the Prophet generally reach is three score or three score years and ten. After that term it is well known they do not live long. For what span of life then" asked she "do you leave your country, your honour and reputation, and repair to the ruler of Dehli? And will he not say that you have gone to him fleeing from a cowardly grain-selling trader?"¹ It is best to resolve on surrendering your life. Risk a battle. If the time of your death has arrived, die. You will win martyrdom. If not, well then, you have the power to choose." On hearing these words the manliness of the Sayad was moved. He returned at once to I'timád Khán and reassembling the council said, he had resolved not to turn his back from Násir-ul-Mulk and had vowed so before God. I'timád Khán said, "What harm can our fighting do to Násir-ul-Mulk?" The Sayad said: "My dear Khán! you stand at our backs and see and do what you think best after I am killed." I'timád remained silent, and the Sayad called his kinsmen and ordered them to arm themselves for battle. As many of the Sayad's brotherhood were killed in the battle of Baroda and many were lying wounded, he selected five hundred veterans, and resolved to surprise the enemy during the night of the next day. At this juncture my father brought a letter from Sayad Husein Bukhári, who at that time was the occupant of the seat of the Saint at the Shrine of the Saint Sayad Burhánuddin Bukhári, from Batwa. It advised the Sayad to give battle to Nasir-ul-Mulk without fear and stated that according to (the Kuraánic verse) "How many a small party has by the grace of God overcome a large one!" That victory was to be the Sayads. That this favourable result was prophesied by the saint, Sayad Burhánuddin and that the details of it would be communicated by Sheikh Manjhú (my father). These were as follows:—When Násirul-ul-Mulk was about to issue against the Sayad and

¹ Násir-ul-Mulk was probably a convert to Islám belonging originally to the Bania class.

Ítimad Kháu, Sayad Husein went to him and dissuaded him from so doing. But he said :—" Of all things do not put me to the shame of refusing you this. I have made an unalterable resolve to dislodge Sayad Mubárah from Kapadvanj. At this, my Lord the Sayad, being hurt, said: "Then all of us Sayads will take Sayad Mubárah's part. The whole army of Gujarát are our religious followers. Let me see what guideless¹ person has the audacity to oppose his religious teachers!" Saying so Sayad Husein got up and came to his own residence. All the great Sayads of Batwa as well as of Ásáwal, in all six or seven hundred strong, made ready to go and prepared to march next morning. That night the Sayad met the saint Kutbi Álam, in the spiritual world.² The Kutb said: "Sayad Husein, you need not go to the help of Sayad Mubárah. We have sent for him and to-morrow he will come!" My father, coming from Dholka, had been to pay his respects to Sayad Husein on the way and he communicated the above to him and gave him an armour to be given to the Sayad and gave him one for himself. When my father reached the Sayad he said all that he was directed to say. The Sayad regarded Sayad Husein's words as Divine Revelation and made himself ready. That very day the effects of the prophecy became apparent. Imád-ul-Mulk Rúmi and Alif Khán Habashi, the men who had charge of the person of the Sultán, said to one another, "This Násir-ul-Mulk wants to remove the Sayad from his way to power. After he has done that it will be our turn next! The best thing therefore for us, is to make up with the Sayad and remove this thorn, Násir-ul-Mulk, from our path." That same moment they sent a confidential man of theirs to the Sayad with a message to the effect that "Násir-ul-Mulk, lulled by the pride of the strength of his army fancies himself so secure that he drinks wine every evening before going to bed. The nobles to whom he entrusts the patrol duty are also as incautious and negligent. If you are brave enough to march out at night and fall on our camp about day-break, we shall take the king with us and go over to you and shall attack Násir-ul-Mulk and matters, God willing, shall end as we desire ! ”

¹ To be without a spiritual guide is considered a sign of moral turpitude, so great, that Bē Pír, one having no spiritual guide, is a term of opprobrium.

² This has a double meaning. It is possible from the words: "That night" that the Sayad saw his saintly ancestor in a dream. But the probability from the mention of the words in the text of "World of Spirits," Álamí Raḥmání, is that the Sayad put himself into a contemplative trance (Murákibah) and thus met his ancestor.

The Sayad communicated this to I'timád Khán. But I'timád Khán said, that it was not advisable to rely on such overtures without the intermediacy of responsible men and without an agreement strengthened by oath. The Sayad said that as he had already resolved to pursue this course without this offer from I'mád-ul-Mulk and Alif Khán Habashi, he would certainly turn out that night relying on God. I'timád Khán said, “ I cannot in that case accompany you, you may take Tátár Khán Ghori.” This Tátár Khán Ghori was a man of I'timád Khán's confidence and not devoid of courage. My Lord the Sayad said, “ Let Tátár Khan Ghori also be with you. ‘ Verily God is with us.’ ” Repeating with these words the Fátihah, or opening chapter of the Kuráan, he mounted and with five hundred valorous horsemen issued out. The distance to be traversed was nearly twenty miles. In the morning they came in sight of the camp of Násir-ul-Mulk. They saw the pickets, and the flank commanded by Shamsher-ul-Mulk Doláji, who was armed and on guard. My Lord the Sayad, opened the action by attacking him. A hot hand to hand skirmish ensued, in which Shamsher-ul-Mulk fought well, but when his men heard that the Sayad personally commanded the surprise party they took to flight and Shamsher-ul-Mulk was carried away wounded from the field. An uproar arose in the camp of Násir-ul-Mulk and the report of Sayad Mubárák's arrival spread on all sides. At this juncture I'mád-ul-Mulk and Alif Khán Habashi, taking the Sultán with them, joined Sayad Mubárák. The Sayad requested them to follow while he went ahead to attack the tent of Násir-ul-Mulk. Information was given to Násir-ul-Mulk, that the Sayad was on his camp. Násir-ul-Mulk got on a kettle-drum horse and took to flight. Thus the gate of Victory was thrown open to the courage of my Lord the Sayad. Ay verily !

'Tis not the turning skies above that rule the fate of man,
But human virtues strong to do whatever courage can ! *

Except Násir-ul-Mulk, the whole army submitted to the Sayad. Mounted messengers were sent to inform Ítimád Khán and he also came and met the Sayad. Next day the Sayad and Ítimád Khán turned towards Ahmedábád. When they came to the city and arrived at the Tir-polia Gates ¹ which form a famous quarter in the city of Ahmedábád, a merchant coming up grasped the Sayad's knee, and said : "The generous, when they make a promise fulfil it." ² The Sayad smiled. Ítimád Khán was present and asked what he meant. The Sayad said, Ítimád Khán, please pass an order on a certain banker of the city to pay this man 12 lakhs of tánkás (Rs. 12,000) and I shall explain to you this circumstance which is a wonderful one. Ítimád Khán ordered a banker to pay the man this sum. The explanation of the matter was this : Before the victory, some Afgháns had brought several Arab horses for sale to Kapadwanj. The Sayad asked to buy the horses on credit, but the owners would not give them. The Sayad offered to increase the value by one-third, but still the merchants would not hear of parting with them, so gloomy was the aspect of the Sayad's affairs at that time. One day the dealers attended an entertainment given them by the Sayad. One of the Afgháns was a seer who could read futurity by divination by means of the shoulder-blades of sheep. He took up a shoulder-blade and told his companions that he saw in it that the Sayad would be victorious and advised his companions to sell the horses at two-fifths more than their value. The Sayad said : "You were unwilling when I offered you one-third more and how is it that you now offer me at two-fifths of their nominal value ? Next day his companions also brought their horses and all the Afgháns agreed to part with them on the condition, that when he entered Ahmedábád victorious, the Sayad should pay them the price before entering his mansion. The Sayad agreed and bought the horses at 12 lakhs of tánkás and he kept his promise.

* A verse of the Kuráan Innal-láha-ma'áná.

* That is, by the revolution of the Heavens.

To continue :—After his defeat Násir-ul-Mulk went to the district of Chámpáner. My lord the Sayad having bestowed upon my father the honour of a turband and the insignia of a standard and leaving him at Dholka to look after his estates there went with Ítimád Khán in pursuit. Násir-ul-Mulk went to the hilly tracts of the Pál and there falling sick departed this life. At this time Ikhtyár-ul-Mulk who was left in charge of the city on behalf of Ítimád Khán, combining with Hasan Khán Dakhani and Fateh Khán Balúch raised a disturbance by setting up as Sultan the king's uncle by name Sháhúji. When this news reached my lord the Sayad he turned from Broach towards Ahmedábád. When he arrived at Mehmudábád, eighteen miles from Ahmedábád, the rebellious nobles taking Sháhúji with them issued from the city and encamped at the village of Rubrah, six miles from Ahmedábád. My lord the Sayad called my father from Dholka. At that time there was a darvish of the name of Sayad Ahmed Makh-dúm, at Dholka. My father before starting went to take leave of him and asked him to pray for him. The darvish said: "Go you. Victory is for the Sayad. But before the battle Ítimád Khán, wishing to join the enemy will separate himself from you and a great panic will seize your army, but all will end well." My father was struck with amazement at these words, as he knew that Ítimád was the head of our army and my lord the Sayad was fighting as much for him as for himself. Why then should he fly and fall away and if he should desert the army how could it remain together. With these anxieties weighing heavily on his mind my father went to meet the Sayad. While yet on his way he learned that Ítimád had quitted the army. This news was in a manner the harbinger of victory, so he presented himself with joy before the Sayad and related what he had heard from the Sheikh. The Sayad told my father that when the sound of my fathers kettle-drums reached his ears he drew the omen of victory from my father's arrival and that my father strengthened the hope by bringing with him the holy man's prophecy.

¹ The modern "Tin Darwázah."

² This is an Arabic proverb.—Al Karīm-jizá wa-áda w fá.

To continue :—When the victorious army arrived and encamped at Mehmúdábád, an epistle reached Ítimád Khán from Hasan Khán Dakhani and Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, stating that Sultán Ahmed was a disciple of the Sayad and that his being king was good for the Sayad but a matter of perfect indifference for Ítimád Khán and for them. So they invited him to join them, stating that they had elevated Ahmedsháh's uncle to the throne, an elevation by which he could as well profit. At this instigation Ítimád Khán, without consulting any noble or commoner, at once left and went to Ahmedábád. As soon as this news reached my lord the Sayad, he at once sent his own son Sayad Mirán, and Sheikh Máh to persuade Ítimád Khán to return. They travelled fifteen miles from the camp and overtook Ítimád Khán and asked him the reason of his opposition. Ítimád Khán said: "Each one of the nobles is inclined to sedition: whom and how many shall we oppose? I propose to withdraw into retirement, you and your army may do what you like." At this time the Sayad also arrived and said to Ítimád Khán:—"We are risking our lives for your honour, and you treat us in this way." With these persuasions they brought I'timád Khán back to the camp. I'timád Khán wrote to Fateh Khán Balúch and Hasan Khán Dakhani that it was not well for him to remain in the company of Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, and invited Fateh Khán to his side. Fateh Khán Baluch went over to I'timád Khán. Hasan Khán Dakhani, however, said that the king (they were fighting for) was of his elevation and the shame of the defeat, in case it happened, would be his. So the next day the drum for the battle were sounded and the two armies faced one another. Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk with Sháhji fled the field and Hasan Khán Dakhani, who had never turned back to enemy fell on the field. My lord the Sayad victorious and triumphant, with Sultán Ahmed and the other nobles went to Ahmedábád. After these events the nobles divided the kingdom of Guzarát among themselves. They appointed the city of Ahmedábád with the territory around it for the expenses of the Sultán. The districts of Kadi, Petlád, Nadiád, Bahyal, Rádhanpúr, Sami and Múnjpúr, Anhilwára and Godhra, and the province of Sorath were conferred on I'timád Khán and his Guzarát followers. I'timád Khán rewarded Tátúr Khán Ghori by the bestowal on him of the province of Sorath and gave the districts of Rádhanpúr and Sami and Múnjpúr and Anhilwára to Fateh Khán Balúch. He conferred the district of Nadiád on Malik-ush—Sharq and assigned some of the dependencies of Jhálúwár in lieu of salary to Alif Khán Habashi. The country of Pattan and the port of Cambay, with its eighty-four villages, the districts of Dholka, Goghá and Dhandúka and Chámpánér and Sarnál (or Thásra), Bálásinore and Baroda and Kapadwanj fell to the share of my lord the Sayad. My lord the Sayad having taken Músa Khán and Sher Khán the Fauládis under his patronage gave them the districts of Pattan. Broach and Surat as far as the frontiers of Sultánpúr, and Nazarbár fell to the lot of Imád-ul-Mulk Rúmi and Imád-ul-Mulk Rúmi gave Baroda to Alif Khán the Abyssinian and gave the port of Surat to Khudáwand Khán Rúmi, who was his wife's brother. Morassa and similar petty districts were given to the Gujarát nobles who were the followers of I'timád Khán. The Sultán and I'timád Khán remained in the city with I'timád Khán as his minister and every one, glad of his share, went to his estate. My lord the Sayad went and took up residence at a place of the name of Sayadpúr he had populated in the vicinity of Mehmúdábád.

After some time had passed thus, Álam Khán Lodi, who had gone to Dehli in the time of Sher Sháh Pádsháh with Daryá Khán and on whom Sher Sháh had bestowed estates in Málwa, as has previously been described, returned to Gujarát. Daryá Khán died in Málwa and Álam Khán in consequence of some act he had committed found Málwa too hot for him. He made his arrival known to my lord the Sayad, saying that he had returned to this country in the hope of his kindness and support and was only waiting for his permission to join him. The Sayad wrote in reply to say that he was welcome but asked him to wait a few days where he was to enable him to consult the other great nobles to invite him. Álam Khán, who was in a very impoverished state, without waiting, went and joined the Sayad and made his son, Qutub Khán a disciple of the Sayad. The Sayad, without taking Álam Khán with him, went to Ahmedábád and said to I'timád Khán that since Álam Khán had come in hopes of their support, that he and I'timád Khán should provide for him. I'timád, who did not at all like this sudden arrival of Álam Khán, remained silent. He and Imád-ul-Mulk were both sorely vexed with the Sayad. I'timád Khán said to the Sayad that Álam Khán was an intriguing man who would not, he was afraid, be satisfied with anything they would do for him. It was not politic that after the establishment of peace they should allow such a man to re-enter Gujarát and again sow the seed of discord. My lord the Sayad said that Álam Khán had suffered much on account of his former failings and had doubtless repented and given it up before coming to Gujarát. He added that it seemed to him contrary to generosity and manliness to now repel him. Since I'timád Khán could not help agreeing to what the Sayad said, he said that he would do what the Sayad desired, but he added that he was sure they would have to rue the course they were following. The Sayad requested them to remember that Álam Khán was once a great man, the powerful minister of Sultán Mehmúd, and that he now agreed to serve them. He said that it was a good thing to have such a man with them. I'timád Khán said he would send for Imád-ul-Mulk Rúmi from Broach to consider about an estate for Álam Khán. A man was sent to fetch Imád-ul-Mulk and when he came the question of an estate was mooted. Imád-ul-Mulk said his own estates were not sufficient for his men and that he must be excused from giving a share out of them to another. After much discussion this agreement was made that the Sayad should give the districts of Baroda and Chámpáner from his own fief to Álam Khán and Aázam Humáyún who was reputed as Álam Khán's half brother. I'timád Khán gave the district of Godhra to Alif Khán Khatri, who was a follower and companion of Álam Khán. Álam Khán dismissing his pride served I'timád Khán so zealously that they became close friends. I'timád Khán gave Álam Khán the house of his son which was contiguous to his own so that they may always be together. After this I'mád-ul-Mulk returned to his estates and my lord the Sayad returned to Sayadpúr and gave a piece of his territories of Jháláwar to Alif Khán Habashí who went to Jháláwár. Some days passed in this wise when Alif Khán laid the foundation of discord. He collected all the jágirdars of those parts and usurped authority over all the country of Jháláwár not giving ear to the frequent written messages of I'timád Khán not to be obnoxious and self-willed. At last I'timád Khán and Álam Khán collected an army, and taking the Sultán with them, marched against Alif Khán. They, however, did not inform Sayad Mubárák of this and did not pay him any attention and on his part the Sayad took no notice of this. Alif Khán at the head of three thousand horse made a manly stand, giving battle in the vicinity of the town of Viramgám, but being defeated escaped safely. I'timád Khán with a large force had encamped about eleven miles off but Alif Khán on the pretence of going out to meet him to negotiate peace went away to Dholka where he became the guest of Sayad Mirán. Taking leave thence he went by way of Cambay and having crossed the Gulf of Cambay took refuge with Imád-ul-Mulk at Broach and thence went and took refuge with my lord the Sayad. I'timád Khán returned to Ahmedábád. On hearing this Imád-ul-Mulk also started from Broach for Ahmedábád in company with my lord the Sayad. His Holiness pleaded for Alif Khán with Imád-ul-Mulk, and taking the district of Bahyal from I'timád Khán, gave it to Alif Khán. For some time after this peace and contentment reigned.

After some time it struck Álam Khán to remove I'timád Khán from his position and placing him in confinement, to himself take his place. Álam Khán took counsel of his followers regarding this. One of these who was a well wisher of I'timád Khán apprized him of it. Acting on this news I'timád Khán made Álam Khán quit his son Sher Khán's house and Álam Khán went to his own mansions outside the city walls near the village of Asáwal and fortified the place substantially and began to make overtures of friendship to Imád-ul-Mulk. One day Álam Khán said to Imád-ul-Mulk that it was desirable to get rid of I'timád Khán. Imád-ul-Mulk pretended to agree with this proposal, but in his heart he began to hate Álam Khán. When Álam Khán saw that there was no chance of Imád-ul-Mulk agreeing to his proposal about I'timád Khán, he dropped his designs against I'timád Khán and commenced to plot the ruin of Sayad Mubárah. He said to Imád-ul-Mulk, "Until you can remove Sayad Mubárah your power will not be firmly established." Imád-ul-Mulk also persuaded I'timád Khán to collect an army and attack Sayad Mubárah. I'timád Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk and Álam Khán and all the nobles of Gujarát issued forth from the city of Ahmedábád with the resolution of crushing the power of the Sayad and encamped at the Kánkaria Tank, close to the city. This news reached the Sayad. He said to my father, "Go you and first meet Álam Khán and then I'timád Khán and to each of them say after salutation, "Whenever you go on an expedition you inform me, but you have not apprized me of the object of this expedition. Please to inform me of your present designs and against whom this army is about to march. See what answer they give. From that I shall shape my course." My father first went to Álam Khán's house and gave him the Sayad's message. Álam Khán hung down his head and said, "Why do you ask me? You are acquainted with their designs." My father asked, "From whom then shall I learn? The Sayad expects he has no greater friend or well-wisher than you. If you don't inform me, who will? He then replied "Miyán, Manjhú all the nobles of Gujarát are agreed that until the Sayad is ruined evil will not be banished from Gujarát." My father said: "Alláh make it easy! But what side will you take in this business?" He said: "The general side, the side of the majority." My father returned: "My dear Khán, if this is the return for kindnesses done to you by your benefactor then the truth is on your side!" He got up and took his way to I'timád Khán's tent. On the way he encountered Imád-ul-Mulk going away from I'timád Khán's tent in great state. No sooner his eyes fell on my father Imád-ul-Mulk exclaimed: "Miyan Manjhú, I always used until now to wear one sword, but now that I am going to fight Sayad Mubárah I have had, look you, to wear two!" and placing his hand on the hilts he showed them. My father said: "The swords you have worn are instruments sacred to the children of the Prophet, on whom be peace! Let us see what results they bring forward."¹ Then he said:

¹ The profession of the sword has Ali, the son-in-law of the Prophet, as its tutelary head. He is the guardian saint of the son of Mars and in the latter-day wars of Islám his name, Id alí was the martial warcry.

“If you have come to see Alam Khán and I’timád Khán, you may see them, but after seeing them don’t go away without seeing us.” My father went to the tent of I’timád Khán and delivered the Sayad’s message. I’timád Khán opened his budget of complaints of Alam Khán, saying, “Whatever was done was done by him. However much we told him and warned him that Alam Khán was a man from whom one must always look out for intrigue, the Sayad never gave ear to our words of warning. What is now to be done. The Sayad never did let well alone. I always was and still am the Sayad’s friend. Convey my blessings to the Sayad and tell him whatever is done is done by Alam Khán. We none of us are agreeable to it. You may go and see Imád-ul-Mulk also and after that come to me to take your leave.” My father went to Imád-ul-Mulk, who outwardly said some very harsh words. He then got up and went into privacy. He called my father there who said to him that he whom the Sayad considered his best friend and well-wisher had turned out to be his greatest foe, who wanted to either kill or expel him. “What,” said Imád-ul-Mulk, “could we do?” The Sayad never listened to our warnings. You may go and give him our blessing. To-morrow we march from here and encamp on the banks of the Kháři and thence we shall send some confidential men of ours to the Sayad. The nature of the Sayad’s reply shall decide the matter. My father took leave and coming back to I’timád Khán he repeated to him the conversation he had just had with Imád-ul-Mulk. I’timád Khán confirmed the truth of Imád-ul-Mulk’s assurances and bade my father adieu. My father, returning to the Sayad, repeated the words he had had with each of them to him. My Lord the Sayad asked my father what he thought of the words of Imád-ul-Mulk. My father said he seemed to him to insinuate that he wished to play Alam Khán false. The Sayad, however, said he had no confidence in Imád-ul-Mulk’s words and knew him to be of a shifty and deceitful character. So the Sayad prepared for battle. He had four or five thousand cavalry about him who all placing their trust in the Lord of Host determined to die. The next day they heard that the army of Gujarát had come and encamped on the banks of the Kháři. When two or three hours of the night had passed, five Abyssinian horsemen came enquiring after my father’s residence. Somebody having pointed them out the house, they came to the door and enquired after my father. The porter said, he was gone to my Lord the Sayad. The Abyssinian said: "Hasten thou and tell him softly that Ankus Khán Habashi has come and wants him." The porter did as desired. My father told my Lord the Sayad. He said: "Miyán Manjhú! I cannot believe that Imád-ul-Mulk is my well-wisher. God grant there be no fraud in all these messages and missions which may turn out to our hurt." My father said that Ankus Khán was the agent of Imád-ul-Mulk and that his sending him at such a time with such secrecy was not without some wise object. "We ought at least to send for him and hear what he has to say." The Sayad desired my father to go and bring him if he was so inclined. My father went to Ankus Khán, who said: "Miyán Manjhú only a small portion of the night remains now and we have to return to Imád-ul-Mulk in such a way that no one should come to know of our having gone out. So you take me to the presence of the Sayad that we may tell him at once what we have to say." My father complying, brought him before the Sayad. Ankus Khán, on arriving in the presence of the Sayad produced a copy of the Holy Kuráan from below his arm, and said: "Imád-ul-Mulk has sent you his blessings and said that the object of this expedition against you was to teach you to discriminate friends from foes. This you will have come to know. Now please ride out with us towards our army: we shall with I'timád Khán bring Sultán Ahmed to you in the way and shall thence turn back and fall on Álam Khán and shall either capture him alive or kill him. Here is the Holy Kuráan between us and there is no untruth or doubt in this." On this understanding the Sayad gave Ankus Khán leave and in the morning, having donned his armour, he went forth. Imád-ul-Mulk and I'timád Khán, with Sultán Ahmed, met the Sayad near the village of Kanij, about five miles from Sayadpúr and having divested their bosoms of all ill-feeling, they marched against Álam Khán. The Sayad sent Sheikh Ahmed Diváni to Álam Khán to say that evil is never productive of good. He who does good finds good in return and he who does evil finds nothing but evil. What you intended for others has gone against yourself. Now you should return to your estates. After consulting with the nobles we shall send for you." Álam Khán said: "You are now coming out against me. How can I go without giving battle." However much the Sayad advised him to desist, he commenced to fight. Aázam Humáyún, who was his half-brother, and his eldest son Qutub Khán and many Afgháns were slain and Álam Khán being routed fled to Chámpánēr. The nobles pursued him, but he eluded their pursuit by entering the mountains of Pál; so the nobles returning from Chámpánēr came to Ahmedábád.

When Mubárah Sháh heard of the above state of things he allied himself with Nihál Khán, of Berár, and brought an army against Gujarát. On hearing this news the nobles taking Ahmed Sháh with them marched to repel Mubárah Sháh's invasion. Since the army of Gujarát had always the reputation of being victorious over the army of Burhánpúr and the Dakhan, when the Gujarát army reached the village of Ráná-kot on the bank of the Narbada, Mubárah Sháh not caring to measure strength with it, retired to Pilúgám, a village about five miles from the Narbada. Some nobles, such as Changiz Khán son of Imád-ul-Mulk and Sarandáz Khán of Mándu crossing the river pursued the fugitive army and having plundered some of its baggage returned. The army of Gujarát, also recrossing the Narbada and going to Jívám, halted there in the open country for some days. In the meantime Álam Khán in obedience to an invitation from Sher Khán Fauládi, issuing from the mountains, went along the hilly tracts to Pattan. Músa Khán, the elder brother of Sher Khán, was in the service of my Lord the Sayad. Sher Khán uniting with Álam Khán seized on the district of Kadi, which was a holding of I'timád Khán. This news reached I'timád Khán on his way back from the Narbada banks. I'timád Khán wrote to Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk and Daráýkhán Habashi who were in and about Ahmednagar (Amnagar) to expel Álam Khan from his Kadi estate. Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk assembled an army, and marched against Álam Khán. Álam Khán came out, gave battle, and was killed, and Sher-Khán fled and returned to Pattan.

After a while the army that had marched against Mubárah Sháh returned to Ahmedábád. In this going and coming Sultán Ahmed entertained several men in his service and bestowed titles on others. He gave Yúsuf Khán Habashi the title of Aázam Humáyún and offered a title to Sheikh-ul-Islám, who was a Bukhári, which he did not accept. He gave his own younger brother, Abdur Rehmán, the title of Sádát Khán, and appointed him his deputy. All the executive power and administrative authority were still in the hands of I'timád Khán. Imád-ul-Mulk though he aspired to equality with I'timád Khán and took care that no orders passed independently by the Sultán should become effective. Three or four thousand of the trusty followers of I'timád Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk night and day kept watch and ward over the Sultán by turns : sometimes Imád-ul-Mulk kept the Sultán in his own surveillance, at others I'timád Khán gave him over to the charge of his followers. As the Almighty had decreed the ruin and extinction of the race of these two nobles he first planted discord and jealousy in their breasts and they began to wish each other evil in spite of their sworn compacts and covenants of mutual good-will. For the least prospect of gain they used to forget their mutual obligations and compacts. On such grounds they always squabbled with each other and fancied their advantage lay in these mean bickerings. The Sayad, as far as in his power lay, tried to maintain peace between them, espousing usually the weaker side, but as it was otherwise ordained by an All-wise Providence they did not desist from their mean and petty differences. They placed the saw of discord at the root of the tree of their prosperity and worked it on. In a short time neither name nor trace remained of them, and the truth of the blessed Kuráanic verse : "To whom belongeth the dominion of the Day? To the One All-powerful Allah!" became manifest. Some days passed in this manner. At last the flames of envy and discord broke out high between I'timád Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk. Sultán Ahmed thought that he had no escape from the power of I'timád Khán and made friends with Imád-ul-Mulk. This displeased I'timád Khán. About this time some Abyssinians killed Tughluk Khán, one of the intimate and powerful followers of I'timád Khán, in obedience, doubtless, to a hint from Imád-ul-Mulk. I'timád Khán, much hurt, went out of the city, and though Imád-ul-Mulk himself followed him and humbly persuaded him to return, he went to Mehmúdábád with the intention of going away to Mubárah Sháh. However much the Sayad also dissuaded him from his intention, he would not be appeased. He went to Mubárah Sháh and taking Mubárah Sháh with him advanced at the head of an army against Gujarát. Imád-ul-Mulk, with Sultán Ahmed and the nobles of his faction, came to Mehmúdábád and told the Sayad that the country of Gujarát was a gift of the Sayad's ancestors to the dynasty, that Sultán Ahmed especially was elevated by him to the throne, and that it was but proper that the Sayad should now take the leading part to protect his honour. The Sayad joined them, and they arrived by forced marches at Ránpúr Kotáh. From this place they wrote to I'timád Khán to say that he might be sure that in case the country went to the hands of Mubárák Sháh that monarch would not maintain him in the power and position he enjoyed under Sultán Ahmed. "Why then," asked they, "should you change the duty born of the rights and privileges enjoyed for so many years for ingratitude?" It so happened that Imád-ul-Mulk had already begun to rue the step he had taken as he had come to find that Mubárák Sháh was very miserly of soul, and that what I'timád spent in a day equalled the monthly expenses of Mubárák Sháh. His well-wishers advised him that to give up the administration of Gujarát for the service of such a close-fisted ruler was folly. So he wrote back in reply that as Mubárák Sháh had collected an armament for his help something must be done which could as well save his respect as compensate Mubárák Sháh. He proposed that the districts of Sultánpúr and Nazarbár should be given to Mubárák Sháh. After much dispute this was resolved upon, and Sultánpúr and Nazarbár were given to Mubárák Sháh, who on his part gave I'timád Khán the towns of Dharangáon and Erandol and Nanádar which is celebrated for its fine muslins and waistbands and other textile fabrics. I'timád took his leave of Mubárák Sháh and came back to Sultán Ahmed and resumed his former position. The army returned to Ahmedábád, and for some time affairs went on smoothly.

After some time the Sultán found that his object of taking part in the administration of the country was no more gained by his joining Imád-ul-Mulk than it was by his union with I'timád. So he again placed himself in the hands of I'timád Khán. He took counsel of Sheikh Yúsuf Habashi who had the title of Aâzam Humáyún and Sheikh Salím Bukhári, who were his trusted advisers. They said he ought to get out and go to his Holiness Sayad Mubárák and that it would then become incumbent on the Sayad to advocate his cause. Sultán Ahmed left Ahmedábád and went to the Sayad. The Sayad told Sheikh Salím that it was not proper to have brought the Sultán in that manner to him. "If this," said the Sayad, "was your intention you ought to have given me notice of it some time ago. I could then have made my arrangements." They replied that the Sultán was afraid of his life and had come to him to take refuge with him: that he had no time to do as the Sayad suggested he ought to have done.

The Sayad said it was a senseless and childish act and feared it would bring him into trouble. "Who," added the Sayad, "knows what results are fated to follow this act and whom Heaven will befriend. What, however, is to happen shall happen; now that our king has come to us he is right welcome."

About this time Háji Khán Afghán, one of the famous nobles of Islám Sháh, king of Delhi, flying before the conquests of Humáyún, with five thousand horse and 150 picked elephants and with equipments and provisions to match, came to Gujarát. The Rána Rája of Chittaur came and blocked his way with forty thousand horse and asked him to give up forty maunds of gold, his big famous war elephant Bhata the best of his elephants, and his concubine Rang Rái, the prettiest dancing girl in his harem. As he carried all his property and possessions with him, Háji Khán agreed to give up the elephant and the gold, but he flamed up at the demand of the concubine and determined to die rather than surrender her. He fought heroically and God made him victorious over the strong odds of the Rána and he reached Gujarát in success and triumph. When he reached Pattan I'timád Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk thought that it was in anticipation of Háji Khán's arrival that the Sayad had sent for and secured the person of Sultán Ahmed. They therefore agreed to unite and destroy the Sayad before he could effect a junction with the army of Háji Khán. Marching out in the night they encamped at a little distance from Sayadpúr. Now when the districts of Gujarát were divided amongst the nobles and when Chámpáner and Pattan fell to the lot of the Sayad, my father had advised him to elect one of these two strong positions for his residence, as he foresaw that the rulers of Ahmedábád would often be unfavourable and hostile to the Sayad and if they wished to injure him he could well oppose them from a fortified place. Sayadpúr, on the other hand, was but eighteen miles from Ahmedábád, and in case of hostilities the rulers of Ahmedábád could in one night march out and attack the Sayad, while yet some of the Sayad's army leaders were at Pattan and some at Chámpáner and would take time to unite. The Sayad said to my father: "We harbour not evil against others; how can others think of wronging us." My father said that in this world of evil the unforeseen was always sure to happen. The fact was that the climate of the place (Sayadpúr) so pleased the Sayad that he did not move from the place and as has been mentioned above, gave Pattan to Sher Khán and Músa Khán Fouládi and Chámpáner to Álam Khán Lodi. In short, when ʿItimád Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk, at the head of some thirty thousand horse, with a strong park of artillery, came and encamped near Mehmúdábád the Sayad sent them a message, stating that it was not at his invitation that the Sultán was with him and that they might themselves come and ascertain and dispel the cause of the anxiety that weighed on the Sultán's mind and take him away with them. That he, the Sayad, had nothing to do with the Sultan's move. They replied, however, that if it was not at the Sayad's wish the Sultán had joined him, that then the Sayad might send him back. That the matter was one between them and the king and that the Sayad was quite an outsider who had nothing whatever to do with the matter. The Sayad said that he neither aimed at the post of minister nor aspired to the regency and did not wish to quarrel with them, but that the King to whom he as well as they owed equal allegiance, had come to him a suppliant fugitive fleeing for life and that he could not well send him back to them volens volens. He again requested them to come over to the King and allay his fears and take him with them. But they were afraid lest Háji Khán and Sher Khán Fauládi, who were coming together should on reaching the Sayad take his part. With these considerations they began to fire the guns they had already pointed towards the Sayad's village and the Sayad had to take the field. It so happened that the path up the opposite bank of the river across which the Gujarát army had encamped was very steep. The Sayad allowed his horse to ascend it, which he did with difficulty. Sayad Hámíd, the grandson of the Sayad, followed on horse back. He was a young man, only twelve years of age, was heavily armed, and his horse was also covered with a heavy coat of mail. It was with difficulty he climbed the steep bank, but when near the top the foot of his horse slipped and fell and the young Sayad, detached from his seat, fell some distance from his horse. His men alighted to render him aid, but this accident created a crowd which blocked up the narrow path-way up the steep and no one could follow the Sayad who thought his men were following close behind him. The Sayad advanced some distance, reaching the place where the advanced guard of ʿItimád Khán was standing. Coming face to face with them, they recognized him, surrounded him and slew him. Sayad Hámíd in the meanwhile having remounted and ascended the steep, did not see his grandfather, though he and his men searched awhile after him. He became alarmed, his army being placed in the predicament of a body without a head or a sleeve without an arm. His men dispersed. Sayad Mirán, who commanded the van, having charged and routed the forces opposed to him, passed through the city and again returned to the field to find that his army was defeated. He therefore left the field for his house and accidentally arrived at the spot where the body of his father lay in the dust and saw Sidi Saïd, an Abyssinián slave of Sayad Mubárak's, seated near the body holding the head on his lap. They took up the body, wrapped it in a scarlet sheet and buried it on the spot.¹ Sayad Mubárak's grave stands there to the present day. Sayad Mirán took his followers with him and went in the direction of Kapadwanj.

Sultán Ahmed, leaving Sayadpúr, went to Ahmedabad, but Aázam Humáyún, who commanded the advanced guard of the Sultán, engaged with the enemy and fighting gallantly fell on the field of battle. Sayadpur was given up to pillage, but acting on the custom of the people of Gujarát the soldiery did not annoy the families of chiefs and nobles and refrained from plundering their houses. The victorious as well as the defeated armies, both entered Ahmedábád and after a few days people interceded and peace was declared. But after a little while the same strife arose and war and conflict began to rage.

After the death of my Lord the Sayad three of his miracles became generally known. One was this:—Whenever the Sayad used to suffer from bodily pain or ailment such as fever or diarrhoea and his friends showed their grief by crying or wailing for fear of losing him he would forbid them, saying that he had always been assured by vision from his ancestors that he would die a martyr. Now as the Muhammadan nobles of Gujarát almost always fought for worldly ends and aggrandizement and selfish objects, these words of the Sayad used to be received rather incredulously by those present and seemed rather impossible. But the sequel proved the truth of his prophesy. God Almighty, to combine in him the rank of martyr with that of a Sayad, brought Sultán Ahmed, who was the Ruler of the period to the Sayad seeking redress from the hands of his oppressors and his oppressors followed him. Up to the time of battle the Sayad kept on sending messages of peace, but from their arrogance and their consciousness of superior strength and armament the oppressors refused to listen to his righteous appeals and hastened to battle and made the Sayad a martyr. Another marvellous miracle of the Sayad was his foreknowledge of his end. When he mounted his horse for the battle, he took off his turban and wound it round the head of his grandson, Sayad Hámíd, saying: "To-day is the day of my martyrdom; henceforth be this turban yours." The third wonder was that in this battle, he, by accident, fell and was buried at a spot where during life he had often expressed a desire to be buried. More miracles and marvels are ascribed to him, than this brief history has the space to contain. Be it not concealed that Sayad Mubárák obtained the wreath of saintliness and its bounties from the pilgrim of the two sacred temples (Makkah and Madínah) Sayad Abdul Wahháb. When Sayad Mubárák was living with the Hájí it once so happened that a large party came to see him and there was not sufficient food to satisfy them all. The Sayad sent for many kinds of food from the market and his own house and gave it over to the men of the Hájí's kitchen. The Hájí, according to his wont, ordered up all that was in the house to the table and the quantity of food that was served was sufficient for all. The Hájí, after the departure of the guests asked his officer of the kitchen how he had been able to cater for such a large number of guests so quickly. He said: "As many guests had come, Sayad Mubárák sent for much of the food and entrusted it to me and I added it to the usual quantity." The Hájí was very pleased at this and said to Sayad Mubárák: "The gates of Heavenly mercy are at present open to my prayers, ask what thou wilt." The Sayad said: "I am unable to retire from the world to attain to salvation from the seclusion of the cloister. It is my desire to be able to get union with the Lord from the back of my charger, that is, in the midst of active life." The Hájí said: "Sayad thou hast asked for both, i. e., greatness in this world and salvation in the next, and thou hast gained them!"

¹ According to the Musalmán law, the body of a martyr must be buried either as described above or in the bloody garments in which he has expired.

"The monkish cowl why needst thou wear.

To show thy saintliness?

In thy heart monkish virtues bear

And don the soldiers' dress."¹

¹ These are the famous lines by Saádi Hájat ba kuláh i baraki dáshtanat ník, Darwísh sífat báh o kuláh i tatart dár. (The literal rendering of the lines is.—

"Thou hast no need to wear the monk's worsted cowl, Have the virtues of a darwish and put on a Tartar's (i. e., a military) cap."
Their meaning is most happily expressed by the Latin saying:—
Oculus non facit monachum.

By the blessing of the word of that pure hearted preceptor God advanced the Sayad's prosperity in both worlds. The Sayad became a devout worshipper and so scrupulously regular a prayer-sayer that he used to perform his ablutions and prayers though, being subject to diarrhoea, he used of cold nights sometimes to be moved twenty times before retiring to bed. Though a great noble and a powerful chief and the Lord of many servants, horses, elephants and great wealth, the Sayad was so free of his substance that at the beginning of every new year when he expected his revenues, he had never a pice in his treasury. This was because he paid up those who had claims upon him at once without caring for the balance in his treasury. I have heard my father say that one night the Sayad was much disturbed. He turned in his bed from side to side courting slumber yet contrary to his usual habit, he could not sleep. He asked those in the room what they thought was the reason of his wakefulness. Each assigned a cause, but the Sayad was not satisfied. He sent for his treasurer, Mahmúd, and asked him if he had any ready money in the treasury. He replied that so many thousand tánkahs had that night arrived from such and such a village, of which he (the treasurer) did not apprise him as it was too late. The Sayad said that was the reason of his sleeplessness. He desired the treasurer to bring the money and divide it that instant among those to whom it was due, that is, his pensioners and poor retainers and forthwith fell asleep. After his martyrdom the Sayad one night appeared in a vision to my father and said, "Miyán Manjhú! Do you know? God Almighty has for four reasons accorded me a lofty station among the saints: first, on account of my being a Sayad; second, on account of my martyrdom; third, on account of my constantly keeping my body in a state of ceremonial purity, and last, because of my being ever ready to sacrifice everything in the way of God. Now in this after-life, whenever the martyrs are deputed to help in the conquests of Islám, I am also sent. But for the wars in the country of Gujarát I only am appointed and I remain and help on the side for which Allah has ordained victory."

After the martyrdom of my Lord the Sayad, I'timád Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk and the whole of the Ahmedábád army went to that city and Músa Khán Fauládi went to Pattan. After a few days Imád-ul-Mulk sent for Sayad Mírán and brought on the tapis the matter of the bestowal of a fief on him. While he kept procrastinating for two months, his ministerial officers took possession of Pattan and its districts which the late Sayad had allotted to Músá Khán and Sher Khán Fauládi, and the other provinces of the Sayad's fief were taken charge of by the men of Imád-ul-Mulk and I'timád Khán. The agents of my Lord Sayad Mírán all the while kept waiting on Imád-ul-Mulk. One day my Lord Sayad Mírán said to my father that his agents were constantly waiting on Imád-ul-Mulk who kept them fascinated with promises. He asked my father to go to Imád-ul-Mulk and find out his real intentions as regards his affairs. My father went and met with such exaggerated courtesy and politeness at Imád-ul-Mulk's hands that he smelt from it the sense of the old Arabic proverb: "Too much politeness denotes ill will." ³ At the time of his taking leave, Imád-ul-Mulk said to my father: "Be assured about your estates. I am going to consult I'timád Khán about the matter to-day to bring about its settlement." At the time of taking leave, my father went and sat near Behráw Khán, the Abyssinian, an agent of Imád-ul-Mulk, who had great friendship for my Lord the Sayad and who, sitting behind Imád-ul-mulk, beckoned to my father to go to him. My father went in such a manner as to avoid the notice of Imád-ul-mulk who, having dismissed my father, had turned, and occupied himself with others present in the assembly. Thinking my father out of hearing, Imád-ul-mulk said sotto voce in an ironical tone:— "The Mírán wants me to give him estates. He does not know that I have not sent for him here to make a master of him but to reduce him to beggary!" My father heard every word of this speech which fell from Imád-ul-mulk's lips, and returning to Sayad Mírán related every thing to him from beginning to end. Despair took possession of the Mírán's heart, and his army also became weak. He asked my father what he thought should be done. My father was a great friend of I'timád Khán. He said that they had hitherto paid so much attention to Imád-ul-mulk that they had wholly neglected I'timád. My father suggested that he should be permitted to interview I'timád Khán and see what he said in the matter. My father went to I'timád Khán and informed him of the facts. I'timád Khán was a sincere friend of the Sayad's also, but when Sultán Ahmed fled to the Sayad he feared lest through his aid, the Sultán should become powerful and ruin him, Imád-ul-mulk being also oppressed by the same fear joined I'timád Khán and marched against the Sayad and the Sayad was killed. This turn of events now became a source of anxiety to I'timád. Whenever during the Sayad's life I'timád had a difference or quarrel with Násir-ul-mulk or Imád-ul-mulk, he used, with the Sayad's help, to make up with them, and no one could injure him. Now with an eye to the same benefits from my Lord the Mirán, he said that the intentions of Imád-ul-mulk were not unknown to himself but that if Abdul Karím Khán (I'timád Khán's name was Abdul Karím) lived a week more he would arrange the Mirán's affairs within that time. I'timád Khán, whenever speaking of himself, used to style himself by his original name of Abdul Karím. My father returned to the Mirán and communicated to him the reply and he began to make preparations. According to his promise I'timád Khán appointed five districts as the portion of my Lord the Mirán. They were (1) Dholka, (2) Kapadwanj, (3) Bahyal, (4) Sarnál or Thasra, (5) Bálásinor. This displeased Imád-ul-mulk and he said to Ikhtiyár-ul-mulk, "We give you Kapadwanj, Sarnál (Thasra) and Bálásinor," and gave Bahyal to Jhújhár Khán the Abyssinian. These two nobles hastening to the places before the men of Sayad Mirán, took possession and the district of Dholka only remained for the Mirán. In the meantime the seed of discord took root between Imád-ul-Mulk and I'timád Khán in another way. Sultán Ahmed entered into some secret conspiracy with Imád-ul-Mulk who sent for his son Changíz Khán from Broach with an army. I'timád Khán sent for Tátár Khán from Júná-gadh. Changíz Khán coming from Broach encamped at Mehmúdábád, and Tátár Khán came as far as Sánand, ten miles from Ahmedábád. Imád-ul-Mulk asked I'timád Khán, as his nephew (meaning Imád-ul-Mulk's son Changíz) had come as far as Mehmúdábád, if he would honour him by going with him to meet him? I'timád said, Imád-ul-mulk might go and he would follow. So Imád-ul-mulk went. I'timád sent Malik-ush-Sharq to bring Tátár Khán to the city before the return of Imád-ul-mulk with Changíz Khán. Malik-ush-Sharq drove fast in a horse carriage, reached Sánand and brought Tátár Khán to the city before Changíz Khán. Shortly after this Imád-ul-mulk brought Changíz Khán also to the City and the seed of discord that had taken root now developed branches and leaves. By degrees matters went so far that Imád-ul-mulk mounting cannon up the royal palace of the Bhadra, pointed them at the mansion of I'timád Khán. Thus threatened P'timád Khán leaving his house and the City went to Sarkhej and thence went and encamped at the village of Suljápúr in the Kadi division, about fifteen miles from Ahmedábád. He there invited Músa Khán and Sher Khán and Háji Khán from Pattan and Fateh Khán Balúch from Rádhanpúr, and having assembled his forces from the districts, he came and encamped near Bári Narsanjpúr. He now sent a message to Imád-ul-mulk, directing him to proceed at once to his estates, and warning him that in case actual hostilities broke out he would not even get that. Imád-ul-Mulk, seeing that opposition was useless, went to Broach. Sultán Ahmed remained in the city and P'timád Khán entering the city, placed his own guards over the Sultán and, fearless of others, took his seat on the royal cushion. All the nobles except Imád-ul-mulk submitted to him. He gave half of the district of Kadi to Háji Khán, and attached him to his side. He gave Músa Khán leave to go to Pattan and sent Fateh Khán Balúch to Rádhanpúr. Imád-ul-mulk lived for some months at Broach, where he heard that Khudáwand Khán the brother of his wife being struck with an aberration of the brain had become excessively oppressive at Surat, where he was Governor. The people of Surat complained to Imád-ul-mulk against his tyranny and asked him to redress their wrongs. Imád-ul-mulk led an army against him and besieged him and fighting continued for some months. At last when Khudáwand Khán saw that none of the Ahmedábád nobles gave him any assistance, he opened proposals of friendship and negotiations of peace with Imád-ul-mulk, agreeing to give up the fort of Surat to him and invited Imád-ul-Mulk as a guest. Imád-ul-mulk, on the strength of his relationship with Khudáwand went into the castle and became his guest. Getting him thus within his power, Khudáwand slew Imád-ul-mulk by treachery on the 27th of the holy month of Ramazán A. H. 966 (A. D. 1559) and his army retired to Broach. After three or four months Changíz Khán, the son of Imád-ul-mulk, collecting an army went to Surat and besieged Khudáwand Khán. As he could not produce any effect by the investment, Changíz Khán had to call in the Portuguese by ceding to them the Gujarát dependencies of Dún (Damaun) and Sanján (St. John) as a price for their help. The Portuguese brought a large navy and blockaded the way of the sea by which provisions reached the fort. Khudáwand sore pressed came out and met Changíz Khán, who slew him in retaliation of his father's death at his hands and took possession of the fort of Surat.

³ The words of the proverb are كَثُورَةُ التَّوَاضُّعِ مِنَ الذَّنَاقِ Kathrát-ut-tawázzu-f-minán nifák.

About this time Alif Khán, the Abyssinian, died. The Abyssinians, whose chief was Jhujhár Khán, gave Alif Khán's son the name and titles of his father and settled him in that position. This displeased Changíz Khán as he was not consulted in the matter. Changíz Khán marched against Jhujhár Khán and Alif Khán at the head of an army. The Abyssinians fought and were defeated and a famous elephant of the Habashi of the name of Udai-Mangal fell into Changíz Khán's hands with his standards and kettle drums and the town and territories of Baroda. In the elation of victory Changíz named two of his dogs Jhujhár Khán and Alif Khán and tied the silken cords and tassels of their standards round the dogs' necks.¹ The Habashis repaired to I'timád Khán and he provided them with estates out of his own. After some time I'timád Khán led an army against Changíz Khán who retired into and submitted to a seige in Broach. At last Tátár Khán Ghorí became a mediator and begged that Baroda should be restored by Changíz Khán to I'timád Khán, and that after peace was concluded Changíz should return. Although Tátár Khán pressed him much I'timád Khán would not consent to these terms. Tátár Khán mortified at this, wrote to Sher Khán and Músa Khán (Fauládi) secretly stating that if I'timád Khán was successful in wresting Broach from Changíz Khán, he would not suffer them to remain in Gujarát and suggesting that they should try and beat Fateh Khán Balúch, on whom I'timád trusted for the safety of Ahmedábád and on the strength of whose arms he was brow-beating Changíz. After crushing Changíz, Tátár Khán said, I'timád would address himself to bring about their destruction.

COUPLET.

To check the evil ere it harms is best,
Regret is vain when it is passed arrest.

When Músa Khán and Sher Khán received this advice from Tátár Khán and other nobles, they marched against Fateh Khán Balúch. A battle was fought near Rádhanpúr, in which Fateh Khán being defeated, took refuge in a place named Dhúlkote² near ¹ The standard is an object of great veneration approaching almost to worship to the Indian Soldier. He swears by his Nishan (standard) and on holy days and Thursdays burns frankincense below it.

² Nothing beyond a mound now (1897) exists of this fort. It is now known by the name of Fateh-kot, probably after Fateh Khán Balúch. Traditions still linger in Rádhanpúr that the fort or mound is a relic of the ancient site of Rádhanpúr, which is said to derive its name from the temple of a Hindú deity called Radan-Deva, once the resort of an annual pilgrimage.

Rádhānpúr. On hearing this news, I'timád Khán leaving Broach to take care of itself came to Ahmedábád, and began to think seriously as to how to dispose of Sultán Ahmed, who had begun to incline towards foreigners, many of whom had assembled in Gujarát. He apprehended great trouble if the Sultán went forth and joined them. The truth was, that Sultán Ahmed, who was a man of mean capacity, could now no longer conceal his designs. He used, when in drink, to draw his sword and strike at the stocks of plantain trees saying : " With this blow I sever the head of I'timád Khán ; thus I would slay Imád-ul-mulk." In the same absurd way he used to say he would slay Wajih-ul-mulk or Razí-ul-mulk, who were councillors of I'timád Khán and thus the Sultán used to keep up the impotent farce repeating the names of all his nobles. Wajih-ul-mulk and Razí-ul-mulk on coming to know of this, determined to dispose of Sultán Ahmed before he could slay them. They say that at this time Sultán Ahmed had got to be so independent that he used to go out to hunt whenever he pleased, three or four miles out of the city and used to present himself at any hour at I'timád Khán's house. Trembling and quaking I'timád used to go out to receive him and used to treat him with great mildness and though Wajih-ul-mulk and Razí-ul-mulk used often to press I'timád Khán to kill the Sultán, he used to put them off. One day they secretly sent a message to Sultán Ahmed to say that if he would promise them the ministry they would adopt measures to slay I'timád Khán. The Sultán foolishly gave ear to and entertained their proposals and promised them the post. This they communicated to I'timád Khán, who however still said that unless he heard it with his own ears he would not believe it. They asked him to their house, where they said they would invite the Sultán so that he might hear with his own ears what passed between him and themselves. I'timád Khán agreed to this and they sent a message to the Sultán saying that if they went to him there would be about him many spies of I'timád Khán, who would be sure to communicate all to him. So if the king came alone to the house of Wajih-ul-mulk which adjoined his palace, they would make agreements and ratify them by oaths and begin to act in the matter. They sent for I'timád Khán first, and put him into an adjoining chamber and closed the door on him and placed by the door a throne for the Sultán to sit on. They then called the Sultán, who came alone and sat on the throne. The conspirators now introduced the subject of the plot. The Sultán in the simplicity of his heart began artlessly to discuss the point so that I'timád Khán heard it with his own ears. He immediately opened the door and discovering himself said :—What evil have I done you that you seek my life ? On seeing I'timád Khán the Sultán's soul flew from his body with fear.

I'timád Khán made a signal to his slaves to knock him down and despatch him and they did so. He then ordered the body to be taken and thrown on the sands between the palace and the river Sābarmatī and to be left there. This happened on Monday night on the 5th of the month of Shaábán A. H. 968 (A. D. 1560) and from the numerical value of the words مَقْتُولٌ شَدَّ بَيْكُتْ Maktūl-Shud-bigunáh, "he was killed innocent," can be drawn the date of the above event.

In the morning they gave out that the Sultán had fled. After a search, they said that the Sultán was killed by dacoits who had thrown his body on the Sābarmatī sands. After a while, they took up the body and buried it in the shrine of Sultán Ahmed, the builder of the city of Ahmedábad.

"The crown's a bauble so pleasant to wear,
But at the cost of life 'tis dear." ¹

ACCOUNT OF I'TIMÁD KHÁN RAISING SULTÁN MUZAFFAR TO THE THRONE AFTER THE ASSASSINATION OF SULTÁN AHMED II., AND I'TIMÁD KHÁN'S EXPEDITION AGAINST MÚSA KHÁN AND SHER KHÁN FAULÁDÍ AND THE DISSENSIONS BETWEEN THE GUJARÁT AND THE FOREIGN NOBLES.

It is related that in the month of Shaábán A. H. 968 (A. D. 1560) after the assassination of Sultán Ahmed II. I'timád Khán seated Sultán Muzffar on the throne, and after some months in order to avenge the wrongs of Fateh Khán Balúch, he set out with an army against Músá Khán and Sher Khán. But after his foul atrocity all the nobles had become disgusted with I'timád Khán and said among themselves that one who had killed Sultán Ahmed in this way would not scruple at murdering another. They apprehended he would next think of killing them after destroying Músá Khán and Sher Khán. They, therefore, resolved to see that no harm came to Músá Khán and Sher Khán and believed that therein lay the popular welfare. All the nobles except Alif Khán and Jhujhár Khán Habashi, who were partisans of I'timád Khan, joined them in this plot. On arriving near Pattan, Músa Khán and Sher Khán intrenched themselves within the city for a seige. I'timád Khán laid siege and ordered that the city wall and the fort should be battered down by cannon. His holiness Sayad Mirán, Háji Khán, and Ikhtiyár-ul-mulk proposed peace and though they tried hard to persuade him to this end I'timád Khán would not listen. So they informed the Fauládis that their best and only course was now to fight it out with I'timád Khán and that they might be sure they (the nobles) would not take I'timád's part in the battle, but would, on the contrary in the midst of the engagement, turn their bridles and retire from the field. The forces of Músa Khán and Sher Khán did not number more than one thousand five hundred horse while those of I'timád Khán exceeded them by over twenty thousand. All of I'timád's men were, however, discontented and down-hearted and that was why I'timád Khán's business fell through. When Músa Khán and Sher Khán went forth to battle they were opposed by the van of I'timád Khán's army which consisted of the Abyssinians who fought gallantly but were defeated. Seeing the Habashi route the whole army was so panic-struck that in whatever part of the field they were located, I'timád's men turned and fled. They say Háji Khán with great fool-hardiness stood his ground, saying he had never in his life turned back to foeman and would not do so now. Muzaffar Khán Shirwání who was his chief officer, came up to him and catching hold of his bridle turned him back saying: "Do you wish to give the ruffians of Gujarát an opportunity to handle the corner-ends of the scarves of your Afghán ladies?" (Meaning, did Háji Khán not see that if he was killed he would place his poor Afghán ladies at the mercy of the lust and rapacity of the Gujarát soldiery?) Then it was that Háji Khán helplessly turned and departed. They say that the Rána Rájá of Chittaur used always to pray that Háji Khán should be defeated by no one, since the Rána (as has been mentioned above)¹ was defeated by the Khán. When the Rána heard of the defeat of the Khán, he would not touch food for two days until he was assured that the Khán's turning away was an act of discretion and that he had retired without fighting. Then only did the Rána return to his usual habits.

¹ Lines quoted from a Ghazal of Háfiz.

To resume:—When I'timád Khán saw that this retirement, from the battle-field of every nobleman, was not devoid of pre-arranged

¹ See page 279 ante.

treachery, he also turned back and came to Ahmedábád and the baggage of an army twenty thousand strong, fell into the hands of fifteen hundred horse who thus gained as much strength as I'timád Khán became proportionately weak. This occurred in the month of Zalikáád A. H. 968 (A. D. 1561.) I'timád Khán now resumed the estates of Háji Khán, who being offended went over to Sher Khán and Músa Khán. The Fauládis observed : " We were two brothers hitherto, now we are three." They divided the country from two to three shares and gave a share to Háji Khán and from the advent of Háji Khán they gained great strength. I'timád Khán again sent for Tátár Khán from Júnágadh. He promoted a clerk of the name of Habíb and styled him I'tibár-ul-Mulk and gave him one thousand horse. This Habíb was a strong-minded man. He entertained two thousand horse, employing good and gallant men and became the chief of I'timád Khán's army. I'timád again collected men with a view to be revenged on Músa Khán and Sher Khán Fauládi, but none of the nobles would join him, even Tátár Khán, whom he had raised from the dust was unwilling to act against the combined nobles and tried to dissuade him from his purpose. This was the cause of ill-will springing up between I'timád and Tátár Khán, who on the pretence of bringing his army from Sorath, asked leave to go. This further displeased I'timád Khan. I'tibár-ul-Mulk entreating I'timád Khán to give Tátár Khán leave to go to Sorath was also considered by I'timád as one of his evil-wishers and summoning him up to his balcony one day I'timád Khán killed him. He attacked the house of Tátár Khán and gave it up together with the house of Áráish Khán, the grand-son of I'tibar-ul-Mulk, to plunder. Tátár Khán getting news of these proceedings had just time to mount a horse, bare-backed and escape to Sarkhej. Áráish Khán flying from his house escaped to Dholka with the Habashis in hot pursuit. When Tátár Khán reached Sánand he also saw that the Habashis were at his heels. Sayad Kabír, who was Tátár Khán's agent following him with thirty-four horsemen arrived at Sánand. He gave out that Tátár Khán had entered the fort and giving Tátár Khán four horsemen told him to fly anywhere to a place of safety as the Habashis would seek him out in the fort. It happened just as Sayad Kabír had foreseen. When the Habashis came they enquired after Tártár Khán's whereabouts, and on being told he was in the fort, they surrounded it and sent word to I'timád Khán that they had secured Tátár Khán and would presently capture and bring him. Surrounding the fort they commenced fighting. Sayad Kabir fought with them till the time of the vespers prayers. When, however, he saw that a great army had arrived and that by that time Tátár Khán must have been able to seek a safe refuge somewhere, he sent a message to the besieging Habashis, saying that if their quarrel was with Tátár Khán, he was not there. That he against whom they were fighting was Sayad Kabir, and that if they wished he would come out and see them. They said, "Come." The Sayad then issued out and the Habashis, taking him with them, went to I'timád Khán and explained what had happened. I'timád Khán approved of Sayad Kabir's conduct. "It is thus a servant should serve his master" said he and giving him a dress of honour dismissed him.

To resume. While these events were taking place, my lord Sayad Mirán left Ahmedábád and went to Dholka, and from Dholka he proceeded to Dhandúka. Tátár Khán had taken up residence at Ránpúr near Dhondúka where the Sayad went and joined him and they went to Músa Khán. I'timád Khán now again led an army against Músa Khán. Músa Khán, coming out of Pattan, gave battle to I'timád Khán in the vicinity of the village of Jhotána, about twenty-seven miles from Pattan. I'timád Khán was again defeated and returned to Ahmedábád. This took place on the 21st of Zil Hajjah in the year of the Hijrah 969 (A.D. 1562). Músa Khán came and encamped at Jhotána, a village of the division of Kadi, which belonged to the Khán. Sayad Mirán intervened and took half of the division of Kadi which belonged to Háji Khán from I'timád Khán and restored it to Háji Khán and made Músa Khán to retire from Jhotána. Tátár Khán went to Sorath, and I'timád Khán having given assurances of friendship to Sayad Mirán, sent for him, and the Sayad went to Dholka.

After a short time I'timád Khán sent for Changíz Khán and having gained him over again marched with him against Músa Khán and Sher Khán. In this expedition a quarrel occurred between Changíz Khán and Alif Khán Habashi, which almost reached the limits of bloodshed. Changíz observed that if the officers of I'timád's army gave him this treatment while yet Músa Khán and Sher Khán were in power, what was he to expect from them after the destruction of Músa Khán and Sher Khán? He made secret overtures to Músa Khán and Sher Khán. At this time, however, Músa Khán fell ill and died on the day I'timád Khán reached Dhanoja, a village fifteen miles from Pattan.

Changíz Khán said it was not generous to attack an enemy labouring under such a grievous bereavement and calamity. As it was on the strength of Changíz's arm that I'timád Khán had set out on this expedition, and as he saw through the existence of some secret compact between Changíz Khán and Sher Khán, I'timád Khán now saw no other course but that of returning to Ahmedábád. Changíz Khán returned to his own country and my lord Sayad Mirán to his estates.

Some time after this Mirza Ibráhím Húsein and Mirza Muhammad Husein and Sháh Mirza, the grandsons of Sultán Husein Bábakara of Khurásán, who were vassals of the great Pádsháh Jaláluddín Muhammad Akbar and who had revolted, came to Changíz Khán. Mirza Ashrafuddín Husein, one of the grandsons of Khwájah Ahrár, who had some time since severed his connection with Akbar had also come to Músa Khán and Sher Khán. As the army of the Fauládis consisted for the most part of Afghán levies and as the Mirzás did not like their rough Afghán ways he left the Fauládi court and after passing some time in the companionship of my lord the Sayad Mirán he also went to Changíz Khán in consequence of an invitation from him. With men of this stamp assembled round him, Changíz Khán entered into a compact with Sher Khán to dispose of I'timád Khán and divide the country between themselves, the territories north of the Sábhar being allotted to Sher Khán and those south of the river to Changíz Khán. Sher Khán advanced towards Ahmedábád from Pattan and Changíz Khán from Broach. My lord Sayad Mirán himself went to Sher Khán sending his son Sayad Hámid to Changíz Khán to dissuade both from taking this step. Sher Khán, acting on the counsel of the Sayad, stopped at Kadi thirty miles from Ahmedábád, but Changíz Khán, regardless of all advice advanced. I'timád Khán coming from the other side with the Sayads Mirán and Hámidas far as the river Khári, about eight miles from Ahmedábád, a battle took place. As the ground on the banks of this river is covered with a thick growth of prickly-pear and cactus-bushes the victory or defeat of the portions of the army engaged could not be seen from the position taken up by the main forces. The forces of Changíz Khán that opposed those of I'timád Khán defeated them, but on being attacked by those of Sayad Hámid were defeated and fled together with their leader Changíz Khán to Mehmúdábád, ten miles from the field of battle. On the other side I'timád Khán being defeated by Changíz Khán fled with his army to Ahmedábád. No one remained on the field of battle except Sayad Mirán and Sayad Hámid and Juneid

Garzani (Kázráni?), the nephew of the Afghán Suleimán Khán, the ruler of Bengal and behind them in one corner of the field remained Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk with two thousand horse, without having engaged with any one at all. While Sayad Hámid having fought and won the battle with such a small number was surveying the field from an eminence with a few men and his men scattered over the field were engaged in plundering, a party of five hundred Habashi horse and an elephant suddenly appeared on the scene, cautiously and slowly approaching the Sayad. The Sayad asked who these men were. Some one said they were a party of men from Alif Khán Habashi's army, who were returning after the pursuit of Changíz's fugitive army. As night had advanced the dispersed forces were from all sides collecting round this force so that in a short time nearly two thousand horse came round it. Sayad Hámid thinking that the army that was collecting was Alif Khán's, said to my father: "Miyán Manjhú! go to Alif Khán, and after my congratulations to him for the victory ask him to remain in the field so that the scattered forces may rally." My father ran to the party and asked whose army that was. When they told him it was Alif Khán's, he asked the elephant driver to give him way to go to the Khán and to convey to him the Sayad's congratulations for victory. The elephant driver made a sign to his animal who threw his trunk at my father (intending, no doubt, to catch him). My father was thinking of fighting him when the son of Hamzah the Turk who was the slave of the late Sayad Mubárak, and who after his martyrdom had entered the service of Changíz Khán, recognized my father and placing his hand on the knee of my father,¹ said: "Why are you in this army? It is the army of Bijli Khán, the Abyssinian, who is an officer of Changíz Khán and who has ordered his men to give out that this army belongs to Alif Khán, so that those dispersed should rally round it and his army gather size. Pray, take yourself away." My father turning rein left the army and reaching my Lord Sayad Hámid related the facts to him. Sayad Hámid sent word to Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk stating that the forces that were forming opposite were those of Bijli Khán and that if he joined and advanced they should if God willed, gain an easy victory. This hypocrite was only in appearance a friend of I'timád Khán's, being in reality a partisan of Changíz Khán's. He entertained a deadly hatred for the Sayad. He simply replied that the forces were not Bijli Khán's but that Changíz Khán himself was present with them, that his main forces were defeated and that he was not strong enough to again cope with him. Though Sayad Hámid pressed him much he would not agree. When the Sayad's friends saw that there was now no remedy they took his bridle and turned him from the field and went away. The fate of the engagement was now reversed. I'timád Khán taking Sultán Muzaffar fled to Morása which is forty-five miles from Ahmedábád and next morning Changíz Khán entered the city. At this time Sher Khán also coming from Kadi encamped on the other side of the Sábarmati and Changíz Khán went and met him. Finally, as agreed upon between the two the country to the north of the Sábhar was assigned to Sher Khán and the territories to the south to Changíz Khán. Sher Khán, now returned to Kadi but Changíz Khán remained at Ahmedábád.

¹ The way in which a man belonging to a humbler walk of life embraces his superior in position. He bends himself down and touches the knee where an equal would embrace and touch the shoulder.

About this time Bázh-Bahádur, the Afghán, who was for sometime king of Málwa and who had been defeated and expelled thence by the forces of the Emperor Akbar came and entered the service of Changíz Khán. Junnáid Gurzáni also entered Changíz Khán's service. Changíz Khán ascended the throne of Sultán Mehmúd and began to enjoy himself and to shower gifts on all around him. Although, son of a slave of Sultán Mehmúd's, this Changíz Khán had a right royal presence and a heart so generous that he used to remind the people of Gujarát of the times of Sultán Bahádur. The day Abdulláh Khán Aurang came to him from Málwa, flying before the armies of Akbar, two of Changíz Khán's ships arrived from Jaddah : he gave them both to Abdulláh Khán as a gift of his hospitality. His minister, a Banya of the name of Súja, said to him : "Khánji ! had you glanced over the cargo of these ships before giving them away you could have formed some estimation of my services." He replied : "Granted that both these ships come laden with gold mohars of one coinage, they can not be more richly laden. The moment they come in port your services are acknowledged." He was a comely young man of pleasant conversation and a presence full of dignity. He had made justice and fairness his principles of conduct so that in his time the hand of oppression was inert. One day a Mughal, one of the intimates of Mírza Sharfuddín Husein, carried off the daughter of a poor man, who came and complained to Changíz Khán. The Khán forthwith sent his Cháushes¹ to capture and bring the offender to him. When the man was brought Changíz ordered him to be taken and crucified. Mirza Sharfuddín Husein begged hard for his life but the Khán said: "Mírza! there are many men like you here and each has a Mughal following. To-day it is a soldier of yours has done this and you expect me to pass over his fault, to-morrow another soldier will do the like and I shall be expected to pass over his crime also. Then it will become hard indeed for God's creatures to live! Whatever other desire you have be it on my eyes and head (i.e., I shall happily) place it within your reach but pardon me if I cannot comply with this request of yours." He ordered the Mughal to be immediately taken and impaled. After this none of the soldiers ever presumed to commit an act like this. This humble person (the writer) has seen with his own eyes the army of Changíz Khán encamped near the Kánkaria-tank in the midst of cultivated fields with a crop of jawári (sorghum vulgare) standing on them. Many of his horsemen had picketed their horses just on the borders of these fields with jawár trees standing on them. The army remained encamped there for eleven days yet nobody had the presumption to break a single jawár stock or leaf and throw it before his horse. In a short time Changíz grew so much in power that Sher Khán repented having ruined I'timád Khán.

When Ahmedábád became assigned to Changíz Khán he went personally to Dholka and brought my Lords Sayad Mírán and Hámid with all respect and reverence to Ahmedábád. All the favoured servants of Sayad Mubárák who at that time happened to be with Sayad Mírán obtained an audience with the Khán. My father on account of his friendship or I'timád Khán would not wait upon Changíz Khán (I'timád's rival). My father's friendship for I'timád Khán was known to all the nobles of Gujarát and that was why my father did not go from Dholka with Sayad Mírán to Ahmedábád. After four days had thus passed one day Sheikh Yúsuf, the elder brother of this humble person (the author), who was skilled in poetry went to pay his respects to Sayad Hámid and was taken by Sayad Hámid with him to Changíz Khán. The Khán was pleased and made enquiries after my father. "Where," said he, "is Miyán Manjhu?" I do not see him." My brother said he was not very well. The Khán said in a joking manner : " Perhaps the water of the Pál has disagreed with him." He implied by this that my father being a friend of I'timád Khán must have accompanied him to the Pál mountains. In fact the remark of the Khán's had a double meaning. In the first place I'timád Khán was known to have gone to the Pál and in the second place the waters of the Pál were so proverbial in Gujarát for their injuriousness that on seeing an emaciated yellow visaged person it was common to ask him if he had been drinking the water of the Pál. My brother replied that it was exactly on account of the climate that my father did not go with I'timád Khán and he (my brother) had to go instead. When he heard Changíz Khán talking in this (kind) way (about my father) Sayad Mirán said to my father : " Miyán Manjhú the present circumstances demand that you should go and see Changíz Khán. So one day my father went with Sayad Mirán. My father was shown great respect and treated with much consideration, being given a place by Changíz Khán at his side and questioned with great warmth. After a while dinner was announced. The dinner cloth was served with pickles of all kinds. Razi-ul-Mulk who has been mentioned above was seated near Changíz Khán on the other side. He whispered gently to the Khán that my father was very fond of pickles, though in fact my father so hated every thing sour that he abstained from food cooked in a vessel in which anything sour was cooked, even after it was well washed and nothing sour cooked in it with the present meal. Owing, however, to this hint from Razi-ul-Mulk the Khán used to select tit-bits from his own plate of pickles and place them before my father saying : " This is delicious," and so on : My father out of politeness took the pieces from the Khán's hand and could not but eat them. When this happened several times Razi-ul-Mulk said to the Khán : " Khanji ! It is perhaps after three years that Miyán Manjhu has broken through his rule of abstinence from sour food." The Khán apologized to my father and turning to Razi-ul-Mulk said : " Malik, if that was the case, why did you tell me the contrary" ? My father said : " My dear Khán ! to do so is the Malik's business and calling. But it matters little ; in this case the acids will do me good on the principle of the couplet :—

¹ A cháush is a petty Arab officer, a centurion.

COUPLET.

The deadly stake if fired by friendly hands,
Turns hellish flames to airs from heavenly lands."

The Khán was at heart a gentleman. He was very pleased at the recital by my father of this couplet and asked him to repeat it and remained seated with him long and became very friendly with him.

To resume. At this time Mírán Muhammad Sháh Asíri at the instigation of P'timád Khán collected a large army and marched against Ahmedábád. Changíz Khán seeing that he had a powerful enemy to cope with sent Sayad Hámid son of Sayad Mírán to P'timád Khán asking forgiveness and inviting him to come and resume his former place and dignities ; adding that a foreign enemy had come against them whom it was advisable for them to unite and expel. Mírán Muhammad Sháh at the same time sent his vazír Zeinuddin to P'timád Khán stating that it was simply to help him that he had come and requesting him to join him and stating that he had no wish beyond reinstating him and expelling Changíz Khán. P'timád Khán was much exercised as to which side to join. He marched with haste from Morása, and coming to Maâmúrábád met Zeinuddin. He told Zeinuddin he was going in consequence of his invitation and assured Sayad Hámid that he was coming in obedience to his call. Up to Maâmúr-ábád the road of the emissaries of the adversaries lay together. There he halted. Mírán Muhammad sháh, marching from Baroda crossed the Mahi and advancing by forced marches came and encamped at Jetalpúr, which is nine miles from Ahmedábád. At this time the greater part of Sher Khán's forces under the command of his son Muhammad Khán were in the districts of Kadi and Viramgám. Sher Khán sent a fleet camel-rider to quickly fetch his son and deceitfully sent a message of welcome to Mírán Muhammad Sháh, stating that he and his brother nobles were all longing for his arrival and requesting him to halt for two days at the place ; he then was to permit of his taking a favourable opportunity of joining him. Mírán Muhammad Sháh deceived by these sweet words of Sher Khán halted for two days. The day after Sher Khán's despatching this message Muhammad Khán came with a large army of Afgháns and joined his father. Changíz Khán, issuing from Ahmedábád marched against Mírán Muhammad Sháh and halting about three miles from the hostile camp, sent a party of Mughals under Mírza Ashrafuddín Husein to try the enemy with a discharge of arrows. The Mírza went and engaged them smartly with his sharp shooters. From the morning up to the time of the evening-prayers no one in the army of Muhammad Sháh was able to alight from horse-back. On seeing this, Mírán Muhammad Sháh without informing any one in his army, fled at night with some of his chief companions. In the morning when this news became public a party of the Mughals went in pursuit and the soldiers of Changíz Khán who were stationed in Broach and Baroda took up the pursuit as they heard the news. The elephants, camels, horses and treasure of Muhammad Sháh's camp fell into the hands of the soldiers of Changíz Khán and of his the Rájputs and Koli allies. Of the chief men of Muhammad Sháh, some were killed and others taken prisoners. This news reaching Ítimád Khán at Maámurábád, he turned back with Sultán Muzaffar and returned to Morása and being unable to remain even there he crossed the Gujarát Frontier, and went over to Dungar-púr. Changíz Khán, victorious and triumphant, remained at Ahmedábád and Sher Khán at Kadi. Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, who was at Maámurábád being confirmed in his estates was called by Changíz Khán to his presence. The fiefs of Jhujhár Khán and Aliq Khán Habashis who were the followers of Ítimád Khán were restored to them. When the Habashis came to Changíz Khán he went forth to receive them with great honour and re-assured them. Except Ítimád Khán all the great nobles of Gujarát came and rendered obedience to Changíz Khán and proffered their allegiance to him. The position of Changíz Khán became so great that men like Mírza Ibráhim Husein and Mírza Muhammad Husein and Sharfuddín Husein, Báiz Bahádur Súr and Junneid Gurzáni, (Kázrání ?), each one of whom entertained aspirations to royalty, entered his service. The nobles of Ítimád Khán's party also came and submitted to him and all the country from the banks of the Sábhar to the confines of the province of Sultánpúr and Nazárbúr came within his rule.

Thoughts of ruining Sher Khán now entered Changíz Khán's mind : for how happy are the words of the poet :—

VERSE.

The beast of the field when it knoweth its might,
 And gaineth its end is contented and quiet ;
 All creatures when free from pressing alarm,
 Save man lust no further for evil or harm ;
 But man ! he desponds when his substance doth wane,
 When it waxes he wastes it and grabs at more gain.

When Sher Khán learnt of these thoughts of Changíz Khán he was pained and became anxious. About this time too, Bijli Khán began to show signs of faithlessness.

This Bijli Khán, was an Abyssinian eunuch, who was a slave of Changíz Khán's mother. Changíz Khán's father had educated and brought him up and had raised him to nobility. On the occasion of the victory mentioned above gained by Changíz Khán, he bestowed on Bijli Khán the port of Cambay. But the mother of Changíz Khán coming to him from Broach (to congratulate him) on the same occasion Changíz took the port from Bijli Khán and presented it to his own mother. This sorely offended Bijli Khán. It is well known that every animal when castrated loses its viciousness, except man, who, when deprived of virility, increases in vice and turpitude and especially on being emasculated young the innate evil of his nature increases a hundred-fold. Bijli Khán taunted Jhujhár Khán and Alif Khán Habashis with dastardliness, saying that he was surprized to see them so devoid of spirit as to have submitted to Changíz Khán who had given his very curs their names and turned their banners into dog collars. He also insinuated that Changíz was thinking of killing them. It would be well if they anticipated him in the matter, otherwise they had better prepare for departure from this world. On hearing this, Alif Khán and Jhujhár Khán determined to kill Changíz Khán before he could kill them, though the truth was that Changíz Khán, far from entertaining the remotest idea of killing them held them in an exceedingly warm and sincere regard. He had given back to Alif Khán his elephant Udai Mangal, which he had captured in the battle of Baroda, restored to them all their estates and not a day passed without his bestowing on them some valuable present such as a horse, a sword, or a dagger. He addressed them by the endearing title of brothers while on their part they were only biding their time to take his life.

One day, it so happened, that both these nobles, with strong retinues went to Changíz Khán's house and said: "Dear Khán, this is a fine day for (Chaugán) a game of polo." "What is there to prevent us?" returned Changíz Khán, and ordering his horse he rode out unceremoniously. Very few of the soldiers of his own body-guard were present at this early hour of the day, the whole of his guard having after their night duty dispersed in the morning to their homes, to attend to their private needs or to say their prayers. Changíz Khán rode forth with a very slight following. He was riding in the middle with Alif Khán on his right and Jhujhár Khán on the left, forty or fifty Cháishes or Arab foot soldiers formed all his retinue and the army of the Habashis followed in the rear in a compact mass. When they had gone a few paces from the mosque of Farhat-ul-Mulk, which is situated between the Three-Gates and the Bhadra, Alif Khán and Jhujhár Khán interchanged signals and Alif Khán said : "Khánji ! this Arab that I am riding is a late importation and has very easy paces, just see !" With these words he gave his horse the spur. While Changíz Khán's attention was thus occupied, Jhujhár Khán drew his sword and dealt Changíz Khán a blow which cleft him obliquely from the shoulder to the waist and he dropped from his horse, dead. This happened in the year A.H. 976 (A.D. 1568). The Habashis going to Changíz Khán's residence took possession of all his property, his horses and elephants. The Commanders of Changíz Khán's forces, the Mírzas and all others, wherever they were, mounted and took their way to Baroda. Pure is God ! Glory to God ! the sun of Changíz Khán's state set in a moment and the steed of his rule turned its head towards oblivion !

To resume : After this event Alif Khán and Jhujhár Khán got possession of Ahmedábád. Sher Khán Fauládi, who was at Kadi, came and encamped on the other bank of the Súbarmati and sent a message to Alif Khán and Jhujhár Khán, asking them to give up the city to him and he said he would deliver over their estates to them. They agreed to immediately surrender the citadel and the royal palaces known as the Bhadra to Sher Khán's men, and to give up the city also the next day. But in the meantime some of Sher Khán's Afgháns entered the city and began to lord it over and oppress the inhabitants. The Habashis said they could not agree with such men and they wrote to I'timád Khán to come at once. I'timád Khán marched hastily and came to Ahmedábád with Sultán Muzaffar and closing the gates, opened a cannonade and musketry-fire against Sher Khán. The men of the city who were in the royal citadel of the Bhadra were turned out by dint of this firing. At last my lord Sayad Mírán interfered and brought about a peace on the terms that existed between Sher Khán and Changíz, namely, that the country to the South of the Sábarmati was to belong to I'timád Khán and the territories on the north to Sher Khán. On these terms peace was restored. Sher Khán returned to Kádi, and my lord Sayad Mírán to Dholka.

I'timád Khán and the Habashis remained in the city. Gradually the Habashis became so headstrong that they took possession of the richest suburbs of the capital and quietly annexed those of I'timád's villages that bordered on their possessions. They thought very little of I'timád Khán, saying: "We have restored you to Ahmedábád; but for us you could not have dreamed of being here." When I'timád Khán saw power thus slipping from his hands he withdrew in disgust to the upper storey of his house and discontinued seeing the nobles and the soldiers. Alif Khán, Jhújhár Khán and Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk went several times to his doors and demanded an interview, but he sent word that he had retired from the world and taken to a corner of his house, that he had nothing to do with the administration of the country of Gujarát and that they were free to carry it on as best they could. If they were not inclined to allow him even that little corner of his house in peace, he said he was ready to leave it and go the way he had come. When I'timád Khán resolved to take this course and Sher Khán betook himself to Kadi the Mírzás, Ibráhím Husein, Muhammad Husein and Sháh Mirza made themselves masters of all the territories lately owned by Changiz Khán and laid an obstinate siege to the castle of Broach. Rustam Khán Rúmi, a loyal servant of Changiz Khán, entrenched himself in the castle and fought most manfully defending the fort for one year. Rustam Khán Rúmi asked help of I'timád Khán and Sher Khán, but none of his numerous appeals for succour had any effect. When nobody came to his aid he made peace with the Mírzás, surrendered the fort of Broach and submitted to them and the castle of Surat also fell in to the hands of the Mírzás. Ibráhím Husein Mírza took up residence at Broach. Muhammad Husein Mírza at Baroda, and Sháh Mírza at Chámpáner, thus dividing among themselves the whole of the country from the south of the Mahi to the borders of the territories of Sultánpúr and Nazarbár. They quartered an army of only five hundred Mughal horse on this immense fief. The number of the men posted on these extensive lands was so small that the salary of one man used to range from 60,000 to 70,000 or even a hundred thousand Mehmúdi Changizís.¹

¹ The revenues from Surat, Broach, Baroda and other districts South of the Mahi were returned in Changizís a coin varying in value from something over $\frac{1}{3}$ ds of a rupee to slightly less than $\frac{1}{4}$, the revenues from Bádhanpúr and Morvi were entered in the Gujarát accounts in Mahmúdis a coin nearly identical in value with the Changizís. The customs dues were returned in a gold currency, the Ibráhínís of the value of 9. 8. (Rs. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$), and the tribute in Húns of about 8.8. (Rs. 4). Under the Gujarát Sultáns the accounts were kept in Tánkás or $\frac{1}{16}$ th of Rupees while under the Mughals Dáms or $\frac{1}{16}$ th of rupees were used. See page 219,222. Notes 2, part I, Vol. I, Bombay Gazetteer.

They had many fief-holders enjoying as salary revenues as large as those shown above. Nearly four years passed in this manner when the fire of sedition arose from the ambition of Sher Khán. With the hope of taking Ahmedábád Sher Khán in H. 980 (A. D. 1573) advanced against the city, and encamped near the Narsinghpúr postern of the city. It was in this year also that Sayad Mirán left this perishable world for the eternal abode. As long as he lived he used to take the part of the oppressed against the oppressor and tried to restrain the powerful from aggression. If his peaceful endeavours failed he used to fight for the weak against the strong and root out the evil. When he retired behind the curtain of non-existence there was no one to restrain the power of evil-minded persons. Matters went from bad to worse and the flames of dissension broke out and rose so high in Gujarát as to envelope and consume all.

When Sher Khán, with twenty thousand Afghán horse came and beleaguered the city with the object of expelling I'timád Khán, and taking possession of the city himself, Alif Khán Habashi, falling out with Jhujhár Khán over the division of the property of Changíz Khán left the city and joined Sher Khán. Sayad Hámíd took the side of Sher Khán. Sultán Muzaffar, seeing that the balance of power inclined in favour of Sher Khán, went over to his side. Sher Khan seating him on the throne, stood by him baton in hand and sending for all the nobles made them do obeisance to the Sultán. The Sultán thought this would last but the Afghán nobles had become so greedy of rank and power that submission to royalty was remote from their thoughts. The new régime only lasted a day. The next day Sultán Muzaffar was made to take his seat behind the curtain of seclusion like a secluded anchorite.

I'timád Khán on seeing Sultán Muzaffar also go out of the city, sent Wajih-ul-Mulk to fetch Mírza Muhammad Husein, who was at that time at Baroda, agreeing to pay the Mírza 500 Ashrafis (gold coins) for each day's march of his army after leaving Baroda for Ahmedábád, and to hand over to him the reins of the Government of Ahmedábád after the defeat of the Afghán army. He also wrote to Mírza Ibráhím Husein who was at Broach stating that the Afgháns had grown so powerful as to have laid seige to Ahmedábád and that Sultán Muzaffar had also joined them. He pointed out to the Mírza that he (the Mírza) too was a scion of royalty and requested him to come with an army, beat back the Afgháns and receive from him the charge of the Government of Gujarát. Up to that time he promised to pay the Mirza five hundred ashrafs a day. He sent with Wajih-ul-Mulk certain jewels to the Mirzá as presents. While writing thus to the Mirzá I'timád Khán sent a like message to the great monarch Akbar Sháh, beseeching him to come with all possible despatch to Gujarát and take over a country which was his own. He added that he was reduced to such straits by the Afgháns who had besieged Ahmedábád that to spite them he would otherwise have to deliver over the city to the Mirzás. Mirzá Muhammad Husein delayed to come, but Mirza Ibráhím Husein hastened at I'timád Khán's call with three or four thousand brave and well-equipped horse and alighted at the Khamdarol Palace without the city walls. The Mirza made it a rule to send every morning a batch of a hundred cavalry to the field against the Afghán guard with orders that fifty out of them should go out and take their stand in view of the Afgháns while the other fifty should from time to time assail the Afgháns with a cloud of arrows. On the part of the Afgháns a force of two or three thousand horse used to go out against them. The Mughal sharpshooters harried the Afgháns with clouds of arrows and whenever the latter charged they took to their heels. This mode of warfare was kept up every day from morning to evening prayers. At night when the guards of either side returned to their quarters thirty or forty well mounted Mughal horsemen from their out-posts would attack Sher Khán's camp and cause great havoc and commotion in the Afghán camp by a discharge of arrows and return to their quarters. Not a day passed without ten or twenty men being killed in the Afghán camp, the Mughal losses being insignificant even in the wounded. In the morning again even before sunrise the Mughals were ready as sure as ever in the field fighting bravely. On the Afghán side, three or four thousand horsemen sweating under the weight of their armour used all day to remain ready on horseback, not having the time even for a drink of water at ease. When some days passed thus, the Afgháns became quite weary. Mirza Ibráhím Husein now received information that Kíka, a Banya minister of Sher Khán and who was given by him the title of Muwáfir-ul-Mulk, was escorting treasure from Pattan and that he would that day encamp at Hájipúr, fifteen miles from Ahmedábád. He also heard that the escort were careless, thinking that the army of Ahmedábád being besieged could not issue from the city. The Mirza said to himself: "This is the time to strike a powerful blow. Consulting I'timád Khán and taking with him Zain Khán Kokah, the son of Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, he issued at midnight from the Idargate with three hundred of his Mughals and marching rapidly reached in the morning a place which the enemy had just marched from. Their tents and equipage were just taking their departure and many of the escort were falling in to march forward. When the noise of the arrival of the Mirza reached them they fled, without making a stand. An Afghán officer of the name of Ibráhím Khán, a man of honour, stood his ground with his men and fell fighting on the field. The Mirza took the treasure, the elephants and the baggage, and leaving by a road about three miles higher up, went to Ahmedábád. In the morning, some time after daybreak, news reached Sher Khán of Mirza Ibráhím having gone during the night against Muwáfir-ul-Mulk. Sher Khán himself hastened to help but by the time he reached Kika's camp, the Mirza had returned safe to his camp, with the booty. As usual, the intrepid Mirza's hundred Mughal horsemen appeared that morning on the field to fight as if nothing uncommon had happened. On seeing this Sher Khán and his army were confounded and dismayed. Though the Mirza showed himself capable of such brilliant prowess and daring enterprise, he was burning to inflict a reverse of some kind on Sayad Hámíd, he having twice been defeated by the Sayad. At this time the Sayad was one of Sher Khán's auxiliaries and was present with his army and his entire property and family were at Dholka, the main road to which though it was about twenty miles to the south of Sher Khán's camp, there was another road to it which was not more than four miles distant from Sher Khán's camp. Every night the Mirza used to try to go by this shorter road to Dholka to put his project into execution. Certain spies however used to bring the information to the Sayad who used to cross the Sábarmati and start to where the two roads met, about seven miles from the camp and seven from Ahmedábád, and to take his stand there with his army drawn up in order. The Mirza on his part, getting information of this, used to retire, and the Sayad, after waiting till the dawn, used to return to Ahmedábád. This happened several times, after which a feeling of indifference and carelessness came over the Sayad and his men. Some used to wear their armour, others to carry it with them on led-horses, some used to follow the Sayad, others to join him after his reaching the tryst. It so happened that one day news was received that the Mirza had started for Dholka. The Sayad mounting with all possible haste soon reached the place mentioned above. That night the Sayad had got on his greaves, but had not on his coat of mail and some of his men were indifferently armed and some followed him a little distance behind. The Sayad sent a message to Alif Khán Habashi and Sádát Khán Bukhári (who were probably his officers at Dholka) informing them of the Mírzas having started for Dholka and also of himself having done the same, requesting them to be prepared. These two officers on getting the message sent their men on and hastened behind them. Arriving midway they sent on Odu, the son of Abul-Fateh and Ahmed, the son of Odu, to press on with the news of their arrival. These men, Odu and Ahmed, were veterans of tried courage and ripe experience. They were given a following of seventy or eighty men and the leaders went on slowly and at ease. Odu and Ahmed proceeding with haste reached their destination. At this time a camel-rider coming up sharp from behind overtook them. They asked him who he was. He said he was the Rabári¹ of Alif Khán, who had sent him on to go and ascertain how far the Sayad had come and said he was returning with the information to the Khán. At this time there were about two hundred and fifty horsemen with the Sayad, but they were all his relatives and kinsmen, men of courage and intrepidity in whose eyes war was a sport and battle an entertainment. There was also a middle-sized elephant of the name of Pák, an animal that had not reached the season of "masti."² They kept this animal to the fore with a man holding a torch mounted on him to direct those of their men who happened to be at a distance. It so happened that this torch was observed also by the enemy for some time when their spy reached them and informed them: "Yonder goes the Sayad with a small party!" The Mírza and Rustam Khán Rúmí, whom they styled the second "Rustam" (both on account of his great physical strength and his bravery and Imád-ul-Mulk, son of Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, who was a young and intrepid warrior with seven or eight hundred mounted Mughal archers and Turks (Rúmís) with fire-arms and Gujarát swordsmen came up to the Sayad's small army. The Sayad had just left Páli (Páldi?) and was passing a narrow path in a cactus jungle between that village and Maroli, some six miles from the camp, when the Mughals coming from behind, shot a cloud of arrows, the Turks, a volley of musketry-fire, and the Gujarátis charged on their horses and a cry went forth that the enemy was up on the Sayad's army. It, however, so chanced that to the right of the Sayad there was a little space between him and the cactus bushes and on the other hand there was some level ground. The Sayad retiring there sent for his coat of mail, but as he put his right hand into it, an arrow struck on the coat and sank into his hand like a thorn into a rose and another struck him on the greaves and passing through them pierced his knee. The Sayad drew out the arrows with his own hands telling nobody of his wounds. He put on his coat of mail and his brave kinsmen grasping their bows gallantly responded with a discharge of arrows. The Sayad took his place on one side of the cactus wall and the enemy on the other side and the birds of destruction began to fly about on either side and to pick up lives like grains of barley. The kinsmen of the Sayad like flying sparks in that narrow place helped one another in the melee. At this time Sayad Sádát Khán Bukhári with seventy or eighty well equipped horsemen came from behind to the help of the Sayad and joined in this gallant fight. The brother of the writer, Sheikh Eúsuf did active service with the Sayad in this battle and received two wounds ; one over the other on the elbow. He used to say that the battle raged very hot for about an hour or more, when the elephant destroying the partition of the cactus brake, the brave kinsmen of the Sayad rushed sword in hand over it with cries of Allah ! Allah ! and attacked the enemy and after much fighting repulsed him from that place. Retreating behind another cactus brake the Mughals made another stand and the action was renewed by a discharge of arrows from both sides. Here also the same order of battle was repeated till the elephant again broke through the cactus hedge and the enemy being again attacked at close quarters was repulsed only to take shelter behind another patch of the cactus and renew battle in the same way. At this time the turmoil and din of the battle reaching the ears of Odu and Ahmed, who were in advance, they came charging in a compact mass and joined the battle. The Sayad said : " Now my lads ! it is your turn, fail not my lion-hearted men ! " and the men charged without delay and on the principle of the proverb that to disperse the ranks of a beaten enemy a word of challenge is enough, put to flight the troops opposed to them. Victory fell to the lot of the Sayad. In this fight many fine men of the Sayad's fell. Of these three men were of high rank and of the brethren of the Sayad, Sayad Abd-us-Salám Rasúldar who held the most exalted rank with the Sayad. Of the brave officers of the Sayad, Eúsuf Shámi and Sayad Reihán, who was the Sayad's wife's brother, were killed. On the side of the enemy also many fine men fell on the field of battle. One of them, a young man of the name of Dalu or Dabu Sultán, a youth of renown, was killed by an arrow shot by the Sayad. The Sayad's arrow piercing through the breast plate of his cuirasse passed through his coat of mail and causing a great deal of hemorrhage projected on the other side from the back. When the breeze of victory blew on the banners of the Sayad and his anxiety subsided, the arrow wound on the knee-cap which he had received early in the fight, now owing to loss of blood began to assert its effect. The Sayad said: "Take me down from my horse," but do not remove me till morning from the field of battle." Immediately on being laid down on the ground he fainted and remained in that state till morning. At daybreak, Sher Khán and the whole Afghán army arrived on the scene of last night's action and placing the Sayad in a litter, they brought him to camp applauding and praising his high courage. The Sayad's charger, a noble Arab of the name of Duldul,¹ was during last night's action struck by a musket ball, which piercing through the chest had passed out at the flank. But the noble animal did not fall till its master was taken down its back, when it fell and expired.

¹ The Rabáris being a class of Hindu camel-breeders are preferred in Gujarát as camel-trainers and camel-riders.

² The word "masti" literally means wildness, lustiness, and in the language of elephant-drivers signifies maturity of age when at the natural breeding or rutting season this monstrous animal becomes so wild and reckless as to be unmanageable.

At this time, news was suddenly received that the victorious standards of Akbar Sháh had reached Disa, which is thirty miles from Pattan. This information first reached Mírza Ibráhím Husein who communicated it to I'timád Khán. He stated that the wars they were hitherto waging were after all of no dread import. If one of them was victorious and the other worsted there was no material fear. They were in the end sure to come round to a state of peace and amity and every one would return to his place. That now the country was going to the hands of the emperor Akbar and they would be extirpated root and branch. He said he had heard the emperor was coming at the head of but a small force and that if they effected an amalgamation of forces with Sher Khán and placed him (the Mírza) in the van, they would try an issue with the emperor, and see on which side victory inclined and which side the Almighty was pleased to favour. I'timád Khán, however, did not agree to this, and the Mírza departed to his own estates. When Sher Khán and his Afgháns heard of Akbar's advance, they left the camp at once for Pattan the Afgháns without even taking leave of Sher Khán, as their wives and children were in that town. The sons of Sher Khán, Muhammád Khán and Badr Khán, also departed towards Pattan, leaving Sher Khán on the field at the head of an army whose number did not exceed forty strong. Sher Khán now came to Dholka, as far as which place Sultán Muzaffar accompanied him. But, when Sher Khán left Dholka for Sorath Sultán Muzaffar left that town to present himself before Akbar, a proceeding in which the nobles of Gujarát had preceded him. On his arrival at Pattan the Emperor sent Ein-ul-mulk Hakim to I'timád Khán and the nobles that were still with him to persuade them and bring them to him. He sent Sayad Muhammd, the son of Sayad Abdur Rahím Bukhári to assure him of the Imperial favour and to bring Sayad Hámid Bukhári to the Court. I'timád Khán and Ikhtiyárul Mulk and Alif Khán and Jhujhár Khán had the honour of waiting upon the great king in the vicinity of the town of Kadi and the next day Sayad Hámid had the honour of joining him at the village of Hájpúr, near the town of Kadi. Alif Khán and Jhujhár Khán were placed in confinement by the Emperor's men. The soldiers of the Imperial army thinking that the Imperial anger extended to all the nobles of Gujarát fell on their camps and plundered most of their baggage. When this news reached the Emperor he ordered the spoliators to be severely punished and reassured and consoled I'timád Khán. These events occurred on the 23rd Rajab A. H. 980 (A. D. 1573.), and according to the *Abjad*¹ calculation the (Hijrá) date can also be gathered from the words Nuh-sad-o-hashtád (that is nine hundred and eighty). After the arrival of his Imperial Majesty at Ahmedábád the mother of Changíz Khán came from Broach and complained² that Jhujhár Khán had unjustly slain her son and begged the just monarch

¹ Duldul was the name of the famous and faithful charger of Ali and it was perhaps in imitation of his ancestor that the Sayad had given his steed this auspicious name. It was also the name of the mule which, together with the coptic slave-girl Maria, was presented by the ruler of Egypt to the Prophet.

¹ The Abjad is the name formed from the first four letters of an arithmetical formula, each letter of which represents a certain numerical value from one to a thousand.

² According to other histories of Gujarát, the execution of Jhujhár Khán, under the orders of Akbar did not take place till after the capture of Surat by that monarch in A. D. 1573. Bombay Government Gazetteer, Vol I., Part I., 266.

to redress her wrong. As her complaint was just the king ordered Jhujhár Khán to be cast under the foot of an elephant and killed. After a sojourn of some days, leaving Mírza Azíz Kokaltásh in Ahmedábád, Akbar went to visit Cambay and I'timád Khán, taking a week's leave to collect his men and things and follow the Emperor, remained behind. Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, who was a disappointed man, told him that he could not reconcile himself to live under the new rule and had made up his mind to take himself out of it somewhere. He asked I'timád to accompany him if he liked. I'timád said he could not do so. Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk went to the hills of Lúnáwára and I'timád kept his promise and joined the Emperor at Cambay. Some of his nobles represented to Akbar that though I'timád had not fled on this occasion he would surely fly in the end. I'timád Khán was placed in confinement by some of Akbar's nobles.¹ Akbar went from Cambay to capture the fortress of Surat. When after crossing the Mahi the Imperial camp reached Baroda, a firman or order was issued to summon Rustam Khán (the gallant defender of Broach), who was with Ibráhim Mírza at Broach. When the Mírza came to know of this, though there was a compact, ratified by an oath on the sacred Kuráan between them he killed Rustam Khán and took the road to Upper India along the slopes of the Chámpáner hills. When this news reached Akbar in the neighbourhood of Baroda he sent off a detachment in pursuit of the fugitive Mírzá and starting himself also in pursuit overtook the fugitives with only thirteen horsemen at the town of Sarnál, which is at the head of a narrow precipitous and impregnable defile, before the detachment he had appointed could do so. Although the Mírza was at the head of three or four hundred cavalry, he took to flight after making a slight stand. As the Emperor had marched from a considerable distance Mírzá Ibráhim Husein was able to get away. The Imperial party put up at the fort in the town and returning to the camp again resumed the march to Broach. After taking possession of the fortress of Broach, the Emperor departed for Surat. A deputy of ¹ According to the Tabakát-i-Akbari (Elliot's History of India, V. 343) I'timád was placed under the charge of that straitlaced noble, Shahbáz Khán Kambo. For the severely austere though rugged and brave character of this noble man which furnishes a striking contrast to the easy and elastic religious opinions of the generality of Akbar's courtiers, see Blochman's Áini-Akbari, p. 401. He never took any pains to conceal his contempt for the new-fangled I'tihí faith founded by Akbar and for its followers though he was often in disgrace for it.

Mírza Ibráhím Husein of the name of Ham-zabán, who held the place, intrenched himself within the castle. Mines and trenches and approaches were constructed and battle and conflict ensued.

At this time Muhammad Khán, son of Sher Khán Fauládi, who with his family had betaken himself to the mountains of I'dar, having got round a force, took this opportunity of falling upon Pattan. Sayad Ahmed Khán Bárha, one of the Imperial nobles who was in charge of that city intrenched himself in the citadel commonly called the Old Fort. Muhammad Khán took possession of the Jehán Panáh fort.

When Ibráhím Husein Mírza went to Hindustán, Muhammad Husein Mírza separated from him, and crossing the Mahi by the Sáran and Dhwaran ford and leaving Cambay to the left, passed through the districts of Dholka and Dhandúka to Ránpúr. Sher Khán returning from Sorath joined Mírza Muhammad Husein. They went and effected a junction with Muhammad Khán at Pattan, forming an army of nearly 10,000 horse. From Ahmedábád, in obedience to Imperial orders, Mírza Azíz Koká started with the following nobles: Nawáb Qutbuddín Khán, Muhammad Khán and Sayad Muhammad Bukhári, and Sayad Jaáfar Bukhári, the elder brother of Nawwáb Azud-ud-Daulah Sheikh Muhammad Bukhári, the grandson of Háji Abdul Wahháb, Sháh Budágh Khán, Naurang Khán and others. These nobles went by consecutive marches, reached the vicinity of Pattan and gave battle to Sher Khán. Sayad Muhammad Bukhári and Sayad Jaáfar, the elder brother of the Nawwáb and Sheikh Faríd fell on the field after performing deeds of great heroism. On the other side many Afgháns were killed. Though the Nawwáb was victorious, the victory was dearly purchased by the loss of two such brave spirits.

After his defeat Sher Khán went to Sorath while his son Muhammad Khán, with a body of Afgháns concealed himself in the I'dar hills. Muhammad Husein Mírza withdrew to the Sultanpúr and Nazarbár frontier, and the Nawwáb returned victorious and triumphant to Ahmedábád.

About this time Ham-zabán left the fort of Surat, and did himself the honour of kissing the Imperial feet. His Imperial Majesty entrusting the Castle of Surat and its dependencies to Quilij Muhammad Khán, and the viceroyalty of Gujarát to Khán-i-Aázam (Mírza Azíz Kukaltásh) turned his footsteps towards the capital, that is, Ágra.

Estates were given to the following nobles in Gujarát and according to the following details :—

To the Khán-i-Aázam (Mírza Azíz Kukaltásh):—Ahmedábád with Pitlád and several other districts.

To Nawwáb Mír Muhammad Khán, better known as Khán-i-Kalán or the Great or Senior Khán :—The district of Pattan.

To Nawwáb Qutb-ud-dín Muhammad :—The district of Broach.

To Nawwáb Aurang-Khán :—The distret of Baroda.

To Nawwáb Aurang Khán :—The district of Baroda.

To Sayad Hámid :—The district of Dholka, the sub-district (tappa) of Khánpúr, and the district of Sami. (a)

For Sayad Mehmúd Bukhári, according to previous custom, a salary in cash was appointed. Other districts were assigned in fief to the rest of the nobles.

The nobles of Gujarát had not long enjoyed their estates in peace when Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk and Muhammad Khán, the son of Sher Khán Fauládi, with his Afgháns, issued out of their shelter in the I'dar hills. The Nawwáb Khán-i-Aázam went to Ahmednagar, which is fifteen miles from I'dar, to check them. At this time Muhammad Husein Mírza marching rapidly from near Nazarbár, captured the fort of Broach. Nawwáb Qutbuddín Muhammad was then at Baroda. On getting this news the Viceroy Nawwáb (Mírza Azíz) directed Sayad Hámid Bukhári, Nawwáb Naurang Khán, Báz Bahádur and Sheikh Muhammad Ghaznavi to join Nawwáb Qutbuddín with a select body of their troops and repel the Mírza. This force effecting a junction with that of Nawwáb Qutbuddín Muhammad at the village of Asámli, which is seven miles from Dholka, marched against the Mírza, who with three hundred horsemen was at Cambay. The writer of these lines took part in this expedition in the following of Sayad Hámid. When they reached the vicinity of Cambay it was so agreed that the Army should enter the city by different gates, that Qutb-ud-dín Muhammad should get in by the Broach gate, and Naurang Khán by the Ahmedábád gate, Báz Bahádur and Sheikh Ghaznavi, by the same gate, while

(a) The large number of Bukhári land owners and cultivators in Sami is thus easily accounted for. Being the برادري (fighting brotherhood or clansmen) of the Sayad, lands must have been allotted to them there, and to this is due the nominal rent they pay to H. H. the Nawwáb of Rádhánpúr.

Naurang Khán and that Sayad Hámid should enter by the sea-port postern of the Custom House. Each one according to agreement repaired to his post. The Mírza having posted some of his forces to attend to the two gates, confined himself to the Custom House gate and when Sayad Hámid advanced against it he issued out and gave battle. The Mírza fought bravely but was repulsed. Three times he sallied out of the gate and as often was he repulsed after a hand to hand fight with the Sayad's army. At the other gates too the battle raged from morning to the early part of the evening. At last the nobles without deciding the fate of the day retired some distance from the city and encamped for the night. During the night the Mírza marched out and effected a junction with the forces of Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk; and Muhammad Khán, who had come out to meet him from I'dar. The Nawwáb, who was in their wake, now returned to Ahmedábád and was there besieged by the enemy. Qutb-ud-din Muhammad and Sayad Hámid also marching quickly, entered the city. This seige lasted for two months. At last the Emperor Akbar marching from Ágra with a small number of men, came up on the ninth day to Ahmedábád, and the enemy who up to this time shone like a bright star, paled and disappeared before the victorious rays of his solar effulgence. Some of the enemy's men took to flight and others took the road to non-existence. Of those who wended their way to the land of oblivion were Mírza Muhammad Husein, Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk and Daryá Khán, and some others of their chief men. His Imperial Majesty entered Ahmedábád in triumph and after a stay of three or four days, entrusting the Government as before to the Khán-i-A'zam (Mírza Azíz Koka), departed for the seat of government at Ágra. This event took place on Wednesday, the 4th of Jamádil Awwal, A. H. 981 (A.D. 1574).

This time the Emperor took Sayad Hámid with him together with all his family and property and bestowed the district of Dholka on Wazír Khán and appointed him against Amín Khán Ghorí, who then held the province of Sorath to wrest that country from him. Wazír Khán went and fought with Amín Khán, but having lost many good men, returned without success to Ahmedábád, and thence to the presence of the Emperor. The Viceroy (Mírza Azíz Koka) enjoyed the government of Gujarát for two years and some months. After that period, in the same year (A. D. 1574-75) Wazír Khán was entrusted with the Government. Wazír Khán's tenure of the viceroyalty lasted two years, during which there was no order in the administration of the country. After this the government of Gujarát was entrusted to Shaháb-ud-din Ahmed Khán, in the year A. H. 984 (A. D. 1577). This viceroy constructed forts and garrisoned posts in the Mehwás country, and brought the country under order and control, lawlessness became rare, and the people began to enjoy the blessings of comfort and peace.

Fateh Khán Shirwáni, a man who had few equals in his day for courage, who was the Chief of Amín Khán's army, being offended with Amín Khán, came to Shaháb-ud-din Ahmed and offered to wrest the country of Sorath and Júnágadh from Amín Khán if an army was placed at his disposal. The viceroy placed his nephew, Mirza Khán with an Army of four thousand horse under Fateh Khán's command. When Fateh Khán reached the territories of Sorath, Amín Khán sent agents to him to say that he was ready to pay tribute and hold a part of his country as an estate and give up the rest to them, on the understanding that he must be allowed to retain the fort of Júnágadh, which was his home, for his children. After consultation the Imperial officers answered that to take Júnágadh was the chief object and end of their expedition. This prevented their coming to an amicable settlement. Marching rapidly Fateh Khán on the first day took the city of Júnágadh, which is also styled Mustufa-ábád. Amín Khán strengthened his position to undergo a seige in the fort. It so chanced, however, that Fateh Khán fell ill and his ailment in a few days carried him away from this evanescent world. The Mirza, raising the seige, went to Mangalore, a town thirty miles from Júnágadh and besieged the fort of that town. Amín Khán asked the aid of the Jám who sent Jasa his minister at the head of four thousand horse to his help. Amín Khán issuing forth, marched towards Mangalore. Mirza Khán retired to Korínár, whither Amín Khán followed him. Mirza Khán giving battle was defeated with great loss. The whole of his baggage fell into the enemy's hands, and he returned with a few wounded followers, to Ahmedábád.

At this period Sultán Muzaffar, having escaped from the surveillance of the Imperial servants, came to Gujarát and remained for some time in the country of Narwári, the capital of which is Rájpipla. Leaving that place also for fear of Shaháb-ud-din Ahmed Khán, he went to Lumbha Káthi, at the village of Kheri, or Khíri under the Súrđhár division of the province of Sorath, and there took up his abode.

¹ The country possessed by petty Rajpút or Koli land-holders, more or less free from direct Imperial control is called the "Mehwás."

After some time the government of Gujarát was taken from Shaháb-ud-dín Ahmed and entrusted to I'timád Khán Gujaráti. Shaháb-ud-dín started for the capital. At this time a party of about seven or eight thousand Mughal horse, detaching themselves from Shaháb-ud-dín Ahmed, remained behind at Ahmedábád. The names of their leaders were Khalíl Beg, Mír Eúsuf, Muhammad Badakhshi, Quádir Beg, Abáligh Uzbek, Mír Ábid, Mír Kae Khán, Mughal Beg, Khájah Abdulláh, Tarsún Beg, Míram Beg, Ghazanfar Khán, Qurbán Áli Bahádur and Mirza Ábdulláh and Teimúr Husein. After agreeing among themselves, these men represented to I'timád Khán that they had separated from Shaháb-ud-dín and remained behind in the hope of obtaining service under him and that if he provided for their remuneration they would remain in his service. I'timád Khán said that his orders were that the salaries of the mounted soldiers should not exceed Rs. 10 per mensem; that they were all Mughals and this pay would not be sufficient for them. He asked them to look out for themselves. These men now thought to themselves: Shaháb-ud-dín has left us behind and I'timád has left us in the lurch; where are we to go? Let us betake ourselves to Sultán Muzaffar and bring him out and lay our hands on plunder. Let us see whom fortune favours." They left Ahmedábád with this intention, and went to Dholka, and from Dholka to Khíri, to Lúmbha Káthi. They entered into agreement with Lúmbha and Sultán Muzaffar and taking Lúmbhá with three or four thousand Káthi horse they marched against Ahmedábád. This news reached I'timád Khán, on Monday night, the 25th of Shaábán. I'timád leaving his son Sher Khan in Ahmedábád went with speed in pursuit of Shaháb-ud-dín to turn him and bring him back with him. He reached Shaháb-ud-dín Ahmed who had encamped at Kadi the same night. Shaháb-ud-dín, however, told him he had made over the charge of the country and its cares to him and had nothing now to do with it, that he was returning in consequence of being recalled. When I'timád Khán pressed him hard, he said he would return only on condition of I'timád Khán writing (to the Emperor) that the enemy was about to retake the country [and that he (I'timád) could not make any opposition and had to re-entrust the government to Shaháb-ud-dín Ahmed. Unless I'timád Khán was willing to subscribe to these terms Shaháb-ud-dín said he would not interfere and I'timád might cope with the enemy or not, as he liked. It was no concern of his. Monday and Tuesday were passed in these discussions. On the other side, Sultán Muzaffar arrived before Ahmedábád on Wednesday, the 27th Shaâban, before the Ráikhad Gate, where the city wall was a little delapidated, and had not been repaired. They were now repairing it and Mujáhid Khán Gujaráti was supervising the work, and guarding the place. The Mughal in the army of Sultán Muzaffar alighting from their horses rushed towards the breach. After a little fight Mujáhid Khán turned his face and fled and Sultán Muzaffar got into the city. Sher Khán, who was sitting at the Chaukhandi near the Bhadra mounted and attended by a small number of men, fled. When he had gone as far as the house of Sheikh Bhathri, he espied a band of Muzaffar's Mughals advancing towards him and again turned rein and fled. Sultán Muzaffar went and resumed his place and became master of the capital. This took place in the year A. H. 991 (A. D. 1584-85). When one watch of the night had passed some of the followers of Sher Khán coming to I'timád Khan, related the above events to him. I'timád Khán now gave Shaháb-ud-dín in writing all that he wanted him to do. Shaháb-ud-dín Khán thought to himself, that the cause of all this revolution were a handful of soldiers who were in his service, and who had mostly not received at his hands aught but good. He thought, therefore, that they would not oppose him and that immediately on hearing of his return, they would come and meet him and the revolt would be suppressed, and he would be reinstated in his former office. With these hopes he returned that same night to Ahmedábád and at dawn on the 20th of Shaâbân, reached the other side of the river at a place called the Bári-chah (or postern). Most of his men being accompanied by their families, occupied themselves in pitching the tents, and in bringing down their families from the carts in a manner so secure and careless that they had not on even their armours or arms. Shaháb-ud-dín Ahmed was every moment expecting the information of Sultán Muzaffar having left the city immediately on hearing of his arrival and of his Mughals coming humbly and penitentially to take up their old places in his following. These men on the other hand, having become masters of Ahmedábád, were already, dreaming dreams of nobility, each one of them, thinking: "Than myself no one is greater."¹ When the sound of Shaháb-ud-dín khán's kettle-drums reached Muzaffar's ears he was afraid lest his late partisans should hand him over to Shaháb-ud-din, so he prepared to take himself away. But the men coming placed their hands on the Sacred Kuráan and assured him of their loyalty and besought him to go out with them and witness their prowess against the enemy. In case of their being defeated, they said, he might do as he pleased. Sultán Muzaffar coming out of the Khánpúr Gate stood on the Sábarmati sands, and the whole population of Ahmedábád turned out to a man to witness the fight. Shaháb-ud-din Ahmed and I'timád Khán mistook the townsmen for an army of soldiers. The Mughals now sallying forth began the fight and with very little ado routed Shaháb-ud-din Ahmed and I'timád, who, with a small following reached Pattan, leaving all their baggage behind to the enemy as booty. Their soldiers also went to the city and entered Sultán Muzaffar's service who now remained at Ahmedábád. He conferred great honours on the Mughals who were the means of his success and bestowed on them titles and estates, and salaries befitting their rank. He gave Mír Ábid the title of Khán-i-khánán and Khalíl Beg that of Khán-i-Zamán. He styled Mír Yúsuf Badakhshi Bahádur Khán and Mughal-Beg Khán-i-Daurán, Quadr Beg-Khán-i-Aúzam, Khájah Abdulláh Khán-i-Jehán and Tarsún Beg-Adham Khán, Míram Beg-Afzal Khán and QurbánAli Bahádur-Kalích Khán, Mírza Abdulláh-Ásif Khán, Teimúr Husein-Bháí Khán. Mír Kai Khán and Ghazanfar Khán remained content with their former titles, but Tígh Bahádur would not be satisfied with any. Many persons obtained titles, called themselves nobles and gave themselves no small airs.

¹ This is an Arabic proverb And-wa-là gheirt أنا ولا غيري = literally "I (am great) and none else."

POETRY.

A mouse one night in dream did see Himself into a camel turned ;
At morn he rose full filled with glee,
To show his size to all he burned.
While bustling thus from place to place,
He met a camel with a load,
And straining hard to go its pace,
He stalked along the selfsame road.
By chance from off the camel's back
Of barley-corn did roll
On the vain mouse a hard-filled sack
That crushed it's soul.
So man in power, like boys at play,
Fills a brief part and flits away.

Sayad Daulat who was the servant of Kalyán Ráo of Cambay, collecting an army, possessed himself of Cambay and obtained much money from that port. He entertained nearly four thousand horse and sent a petition to Sultán Muzaffar who in return sent him the present of a horse and a dress of honour with the title of "Rustam Khán" and ordered him to remain where he was and that he would send for him when wanted. When some days passed thus Nawwáb Qutb-ud-dín Muhammad, who was then at Nazarbár, heard of these events and came by forced marches to Baroda. Sultán Muzaffar, leaving Mír Ábid behind him at Ahmedábád, on the 17th of the month of Zil-Quâdah of the same year, departed for Baroda. Sayad Daulat joined him near Nariád, with four thousand horse. On hearing of this Nawwáb Qutb-ud-dín Muhammad sent Muhammad Afzal Khán and Muhammad Mírak with three hundred horse, to occupy and hold the ford of Khán-púr-Bánkáner against the advance of the enemy. They went to the place ordered, but being in secret league and correspondence with Sultán Muzaffar, after a little show of fight took to flight.

When the Sultán reached the neighbourhood of the city of Baroda, Nawwáb Qutb-ud-dín marched out with his officers (who were only outwardly the friends of the Nawwáb but really the partisans of the Sultán), to oppose the Sultán. When the Nawwáb came to know the true feelings of his army he returned and entered the fort of the city. Sultán Muzaffar, with about twenty thousand horse and foot, and a numerous following of Kolis and Rájputs, besieged the city. The Khán notwithstanding the inimical feelings of his men, held the fort for two and twenty days and made almost superhuman efforts to maintain his position. But what could one man do against such odds? On the twenty-first day of the seige Afzal Muhammad Mírak and Chárkas Khán Rúmi from their batteries sent a message to Sultán Muzaffar stating that as long as they remained on their batteries the people of the city having an eye on them would guard their batteries. They asked the Sultán to send for them on the pretence of negotiating a peace. They requested Sultán Muzaffar to send also for Zeinuddín Kambo (who was a relative of Shahbáz Khán Kambo,) and was sent out with I'timád Khán from the court and was sent by Shaháb-ud-din Ahmed and I'timád Khán on their defeat to bring Qutb-ud-dín to their help against the enemy. During the seige this Zeinuddín was making sincere and faithful efforts in the Imperial cause. They also asked the Sultán to send for Sayad Jalál Bhakhri (who was one of the faithful followers of Qutb-ud-dín Muhammad), and for Khwájah Yahyá, Agent of Naurang Khán. That he was to pretend to imprison Afzal Muhammad Mírak, and Khájah Yahya, and kill Zeinuddin Kambo, and Sayad Jalál Bhakri, and the next day assault the fort, and no one, said he, would raise a finger in its defence and he would gain his object. The Sultán did as advised. Nawwáb Qutb-ud-dín Muhammad sent a deputation of the five persons above enumerated. The Sultán put them in confinement as soon as they came. The next morning he threw Zeinuddin Kambo under an elephant's foot, but Sayad Ahmed Bukhári who was with the Sultán, interceded with the Sultán for the life of Sayad Jalál Bhakhri and took him to his quarters. The Sultán mounting his horse, gave the order for all his nobles to assault the fort. They brought the cannon that they had got from Ahmedábád to bear on the fort. The state of the Khan's army has been described above, still for some days the Khán tried hard alone to do his best, but the cannonade levelled the fort to the ground and the enemy entered the breach. The Nawwáb now retired to the citadel and was beseiged there. The next morning the Sultán took an oath on the sacred Kuráan to spare the life of the Nawwáb and with a promise to that effect, sent for him. The Khán went over to the Sultán, who, at the instigation of some interested persons, imprisoned the Khán and his sister's son Sayad Jalál-ud-dín and after a few hours killed both of them. After a sojourn of two days at Baroda the Sultán on the third, marched towards Broach and alighted near the city. The mother of Nawwáb Naurang Khán, with some of her slaves, was in the Broach fort. On the third day of the siege these traitorous slaves came to the Sultán and gave up the keys of the fort of Broach to the Sultán and all the Nawwáb's treasure fell into the Sultán's hands. He remained for fifteen days at Broach. Presently news was received that Khán Khánán, the son of Byram Khán, was under orders from the Emperor coming by forced marches from Jhálore. The Sultán turned his footsteps towards Ahmedábád, and arrived there on the 6th Muharram A. H. 992 (A. D. 1585-86), and on Monday the 9th, issuing from the city he encamped at Mehmúd-Nagar, nearly two miles from the city of Ahmedábád. On Tuesday he remained there. On Wednesday, Mírza Khán-Khánán leaving Sarkhez on the left, came and encamped near the Sábarmati. The Sultán leaving Mahmúd Nagar crossed the river and encamped near the Mausoleum of Sháh Bhikan, son of Sháh-Álam. On Thursday both the armies remained encamped. On Friday they formed their ranks and a battle was fought in which Allah opened the door of victory to Nawwáb Mírza Khán Khánán. Amongst the Imperial servants who fell in this battle, was Sayad Háshim, son of Sayad Muhammad Bárha. His elder brother Sayad Kásim was wounded. The Sultán being defeated, went to Cambay where nearly eleven or twelve thousand horse soon rallied round him. On the 2nd of Safar Nawwáb Mírza Khán marched from Ahemedábád towards Cambay. The Imperial army from Málwa commanded by Sharíf Khán, Kilích Khán and Naurang Khán, also arrived to co-operate with him and reached Baroda on the morning of the day on which the Sultán was defeated. The writer of these lines was present with that army. When they received at Baroda the news of the victory gained by the Imperial arms they remained there. Nawwáb Naurang Khán and Mírza Záhíd, son of Sharíf Khán made a rapid march against Broach to seize the fortress. Háji Samad Khán and Charkas Khán and Násir Khán who held the fort on behalf of Muzaffar shutting the gates in the face of the Nawwáb, opened a cannonade and fire of musketry. Nawwáb Naurang Khán, having encamped near Broach every day was diligent in the search of means to worst the enemy, but when Nawwáb Mírza Khán set out for Cambay he wrote to him inviting him thither, stating that the enemy was again assembling there in force and that after dispersing them they would attend to other business. Naurang Khán, therefore, after a seige of fifteen days set out to join the camp of Mírza Khán at Cambay, and came up with him at Búreja, about eleven miles from Ahmedábád. Sultán Muzaffar learning of this amalgamation, left Cambay for Baroda, and from Baroda went and entered, the hilly tracts of Jhámpla in Rájpipla. The (Imperial) forces also went in pursuit of him to Jhámpla where Sultán Muzaffar made a stand. As the Málwa army had not taken part in the first fight, they now tried their best to engage the enemy and succeeding in doing so gained a victory after a short and easy battle. The Sultán was defeated and his army dispersed, and many of his men entered the service of Mírza Khán, who notwithstanding the magnitude of their crime, pardoned them. Others went away to the Dakhan. All his baggage was plundered by the men of the victorious army and every one went his own way. The Sultán could never collect an army after this and with a few men went to Lúmbha Káthi at Khíri (in Káthiáwár). Nawwáb Mírza Khán returned victorious to Ahmedábád. At the town of Sínore Mírza Khán heard that Háji Samak and Charkas Khán and Nasír Khán were still in the fort of Broach. Nawwáb Shahábuddin Ahmed Khán, Kilích Khán, Sharif Khán and Naurang Khán were appointed by him at the head of the whole of the Málwa army against Broach, he himself returning to Ahmedábád. The Emperor conferred on Mírza Khán the title of "Khán-Khánán." After these two victories and from that day to this his power, dignity and state have been on the increase. God Almighty give him long life and perpetuate his greatness to the Day of Judgment!

The abovementioned nobles went and besieged Broach. When the besieged were reduced to great straits one night Nasír Khán and Charkas Khán fled, Nasír Khán having killed Haji Samak by treachery lest he might join the Imperial nobles. The horse of Charkas Khán becoming bogged in the mud of the Narbada he was captured and beheaded. Nasír Khán escaped, and the fort was captured. Sháhábuddin Ahmed Khán now went to Málwa because that country had been bestowed on him in fief and the other nobles returned to Ahmedábád.

After his defeat and retirement to Khíri Sultán Muzaffar went to Amín Khán, the son of Tátár Khán Ghori, of whom mention has been made above. Amín Khán allotted to the Sultán the town of Gondal, which was (then) waste, as a residence and the Sultán lived in the fort of that village, hoping that Amín Khán would help him. Amín Khán, however, said he could not command means sufficient to equip an army, and that if the Sultán gave him two hundred thousand Mehmúdis, he would organize an army and place himself entirely at the Sultán's service. The Sultán sent him two hundred thousand Mehmúdis—but Amín Khán took the money and failed to perform the promise.

When the Khán-i-Khánán learned that Muzaffar was still hankering after getting an army around him he led an expedition to Sorath against the Sultán.¹ The emissaries of Amín Khán and the Jám came and stated to the Khán Khánán that their principals had harboured the Sultán in their territories only to keep him from brigandage. That if the viceroy went against the Sultán personally or sent an army he was welcome to do so—it was no business of theirs. The Viceroy only wished them to remain where they were. He would see to all the rest himself, provided they agreed neither to give the Sultán shelter nor passage through their territories. Agreeing to these terms the agents made engagements to that effect and the viceroy set out on his expedition. When he reached the village of Upleta, fifteen miles from Júnágadh, he heard that Muzaffar had entered the Barda hills. The Viceroy left his camp behind and marched on with a light following. When he reached the defiles of the hills, he sent a party of his men to enter and reconnoitre the different spurs. Sultán Muzaffar however, had some time ere this left the Jám's country and entered Dánta, which is the residence of seditious Kolis. Abhai Chandra Rájput, a Chohán, and some of the Sayads of Bárha, like Sayad Lád Khán and Sayad Bahádur who were left to guard the city of Ahmedábád and its dependencies, went and fought with Muzaffar, who being defeated, again entered the Narwári country (Rájpípla). As the Jám had not kept to his agreement of not harbouring the Sultán in or letting him pass through his territories and as the Sultán had passed through them to Dánta, the Nawáb leaving the Barda hills drew an army against the Jám. The Jám quaked at this intended advance of the viceroy and making up his mind to die, with fifteen thousand horse and twenty thousand foot came and encamped outside his capital of Nawá Nagar. In the language of the Musalmáns of the Jám's country when the Jám himself determines to die and with his children and property goes out to oppose the enemy, the practice is termed láwah (Gujarátí લાવણ). The Nawáb ultimately returned to Ahmedábád after taking from the Jám the elephants that had fallen into his hands when Mírza Khán, nephew of Shaháb-ud-din Ahmed was defeated as has been above described by Amín Khán. Some horses were also given by the Jám in addition by way of compensation and penalty to the viceroy.

¹ The text here, as far as it relates to the Káthiáwár campaign of the Khán-i-Khánán, and up to the word Barah, is, according to the late Colonel J. W. Watson, rather vague and inaccurate. According to him, though the text somewhat incorrectly writes it Barah براہ the word is evidently a copyist's error for Barda برد. Were it not so, and had the کوہ or hills referred to been the Gírnár the Viceroy would have chastised Amín Khán. The efforts of Khán Khánán were directed against the Jám, in whose territories lie the Barda hills. From the data before me, it seems that Colonel Watson's objection is well founded.

In the year 999 A. H. (A.D. 1592-93) Khán Khánán was recalled to the court and the government of Gujarát was conferred on the Nawwáb Khán-i-Ázam.

Sultán Muzaffar again returned to the neighbourhood of the Jám's territories and after waiting a year the Khán-i-Ázam led an army against the Jám, with the intention of expelling Sultán Muzaffar from that country or of capturing him. He put Nawwáb Naurang Khán and Mirán Sayad Kásim Bárha in advance and followed them in person. The writer of these lines was also in this expedition. Naurang Khán and Sayad Kásim advanced and encamped before Morvi.

The Nawwáb himself was near Viramgám. Amín Khán being dead, his son Daulat Khán went and joined the Jám. Sultán Muzaffar also with an army of Káthís and with Bhárú the Jám came to his aid and a large army assembled. For some time messages passed between Naurang Khán and the Jám to the effect that he should expel Sultán Muzaffar from his territories and never suffer him to re-enter them and to give some good horses by way of tribute. But proud of his large army, the Jám did not consent to this. Naurang Khán and the Mirán wrote to this effect to the Khán-i-Ázam, who in a rage at once marched against the enemy, making light of their strength. He halted one day at Báthiri, nearly five miles from the enemy and it so happened that that day the monsoons broke and for five days and nights there was a large and continuous downpour of rain. The ground became so muddy that it was difficult to go from one tent to another and there was such a puddle of mud and water between the two armies that a mosquito could not put his foot on the ground without getting bogged much less a horse or an elephant. The skirmishers of the Jám's army during these five nights came and killed sometimes a horse, sometimes an elephant and sometimes they wounded men and went off. Grain became so scarce as to be sold at prices as extravagantly high as a ser (nearly 1½ lbs.) to a rupee. The Nawwáb now held a consultation with the Chief Officers of the Imperial forces. Some advised an immediate engagement with musketry and cannon and a pitched battle when the wind blew and dried the ground. Sayad Kásim said there was but little grain in the Imperial camp, but there was plenty in the enemy's; that if they waited for a pitched battle the men would be disabled by hunger. It was therefore the best policy not to engage the enemy but to march on to the Jám's capital, Nawá Nagar, which was stocked with all the necessities. His family and property also being there, he would be obliged to leave the place and come to intercept them and then where ever he opposed them they could fight him. All approved of the Sayad's advice, and next morning they marched for Nawá Nagar. The Jám in great anxiety marched away and came and encamped in the limits of the town of Dhokar, about eight miles from the Imperial camp and intercepted the route to Nawá Nagar. When this information reached the Nawwáb as the road was heavy with mud and rain-water it was arranged that the Imperial forces should march three miles and then encamp to enable them to give battle the next day. When they arrived at the camp agreed upon, it being a rising ground, they could see the tents and army of the enemy. Sayad Kásim commanded the van and Naurang Khán the right and on the left were Gújar Khán and Khájah Muhammed Rafi, who were amongst the bravest men of the day, with several of the Imperial nobels and local landowners. Mirza Ihtirám, son of the Viceroy, commanded the rear. The Nawwáb himself and Mirza Anwar were in the front of the army. When the army of the enemy appeared the Nawwáb asked Sayad Kásim what to do, as their intention was to fight the next day. The Sayad said if they did not offer battle that day the enemy would become arrogant. The Viceroy therefore said: "Be it auspicious! we shall fight to-day." Reciting the Fátihah, they advanced, until the van became engaged., Khájah Muhammad Rafi' advancing quickly, encountered the forces opposed to him, which were commanded by Áchár, the eldest son of the Jám, and his minister Jasa. A hand-to-hand fight ensued. While this was raging hot Daulat Khán, the son of Amín Khán, after directing a cannonade against them, fell upon Sayed Kásim's Imperialists with many Kolis. A mist now arose, which like night wrapped the world in darkness in which the swords flashed and gleamed like falling stars. At this time Khájah Muhammad Rafi' was killed and the left wing of the Imperial army defeated. The Jám's minister, Jásá, and Áchár, the Jám's son, having routed the army opposed to them, attacked the forces under Sayad Kásim. The Sayad, whose bravery and prowess were proverbial, could not be moved from his place even by the lightning flashes of swords or by clouds of arrows. At this time Gújar Khán and Mirza Anwar, commanders of the left and the viceroy himself, who was at the van of his army, threw themselves upon the enemy, who turned their backs and fled. The son of the Jám and his wretched minister were both slain and left about 1,500 of their men killed on the field. The names of those who were killed on the side of the Imperialists are as follows: Khájah Muhammad Rafi'

¹ The Fátihah is literally the opening or first chapter of the Kuráan. Its recitation at difficult moments is considered auspicious.

Khájah Sheikh ; Sayad Sharfuddín, nephew of Sháh Abú Turáb ; Sayad Kabír, son of Sayad Ali Khán, with thirty or forty men. God bestowed victory on the viceroy.

One of the good deeds in the life of the viceroy, in the annals of whose life there is no lack of bright achievements, was that after the death of Sultán Muzaffar he performed on Monday the 2nd of the month of Rajab A.H. 1001 (A.D. 1594) the pilgrimage (to Makkah). Though he was at that time the viceroy of Gujarát, the best of the provinces of India, and was possessed in the highest degree of all the means of happiness and enjoyment and no nobleman of his time probably enjoyed the friendship and intimacy of the Emperor to such a degree, yet placing all this aside he embarked on a ship at the end of the sailing season when the sea was wild and tempestuous enough to frighten one's soul out of his body. It is said that one day somebody said to him that the sea at the time was so wild and stormy that it seemed to express in inanimate language the warning, that whoever ventured upon it in such weather would do so at the risk of his life. But the brave nobleman said that the stormy, raging sea was but a sea of water. If an ocean of fire intervened between him and his sacred resolve he would not be deterred by it. He embarked with his family in such weather and, they weighed anchor and he sailed away. God rewarded the purity of his intentions by landing him safely on the shores of the land of his destination and by bestowing on him the merit of the ordained perambulations round the Kaúba at Makka and the visit to Madína.

But to continue: The Jám, the Sultán, and Daulat Khán, fleeing from the field entered the fort of Júnágadh. Next morning the Viceroy went from Dholar to Nawúnagar. The family of the Jám, and his servants had all left and only a few of his servants remained in the city. They were taken prisoners and the city given up to plunder. The next day, the Nawwábs Naurang Khán and Gújar Khán and Mirán Sayad Kásim were sent against the fort of Júnágadh, the Viceroy himself remaining at Nawúnagar. On hearing this news, Sultán Muzaffar and the Jám descending from the fort, set off for the Jám's country, Daulat Khán remaining in the fort. By chance that very day the above-mentioned nobles arrived before the fort of Júnágadh and on that day Daulat Khan, the son of Amin Khán, who was the ruler of the fort, died. His agents and chief officers strengthening the fort, commenced a musketry fire and cannonade.

The Imperial nobles remained for several days before the fortress, when the Viceroy himself coming there, made several attempts to take the fortress. The country, however, being waste, grain became at first very scarce and then unobtainable in his camp. So he relinquished the siege of the fortress and returned to Ahmedábád.

After seven or eight months he again set out for the conquest of Júnágadh. The agents of the Jám came and besought him to pass over the fault of their master and to restore his kingdom to him, in return for which the Jám offered his submission and services to the Viceroy. The Viceroy, agreeing, asked the Jám to undertake to regularly supply his army with grain and advanced and besieged Júnágadh. The Jám regularly sent supplies of grain to the Imperial camp. After three months, the garrison surrendered the fort to the Viceroy and submitted to him.

About this time information reached the Viceroy that Sultán Muzaffar had gone to Jagat, a well known place of Hindú worship on the shore of the salt sea. The Viceroy sent Naurang Khán, Mírza Anwar, and Gújar Khán after Muzaffar. These officers marching with despatch to Jagat, were informed that the Sultán had gone to Bet. Without halting, the Imperial officers at once pursued the fugitive Sultán to Bet. The news of their advance, however, reaching Síva Vádhel, ¹ he destroyed his village, and embarked Sultán Muzaffar with his family on board a ship and was preparing himself to follow in another vessel but as it was low water the sailing of the boats was delayed. The fugitives believed that the Imperial army could not overtake them that day from Jagat but perceiving the approach of the vanguard of the Imperial forces the Vádhel made Sultán Muzaffar to alight and mounting him on a fleet horse and giving him an escort of some of his Rájputés sent him away. While the Vádhel was attempting to reach the boat himself the Imperial army came up. The Vádhel with forty or fifty men that were with him, fought gallantly and was killed and his family and people were taken prisoners. After the tide rose at high water the boat containing the family and harem of the Sultán sailed away. The Imperial officers came to Arámra, a place belonging to Sagram Vádhel, the Rájah of Jagat. This man came and met the Imperial officers and asked them to give him a party of their picked men to enable him to pursue and capture the vessel on which the Sultán's family had sailed from whatever place they might have gone to, since all the islands of those parts were under his rule. This request of his had a treacherous motive. He really wished to select the finest men of the Imperial force and take them away and after landing them on some island, to sail away and keep them as pledges for the exchange of the family and property of Siva Vádhel. But God made Naurang Khán to suspect his intentions and he said: "(In that case) Sagrám himself shall remain with me and he may send his own men in these vessels." On this, Sagrám fled, and his treachery became apparent. The Viceroy and Mírza Anwar returned to Júnágadh. The Viceroy now led his army against Morbi. The Jám came and paid his respects while the Viceroy was encamped in the vicinity of Morbi.

¹ This Vádhel Rájput seems, no doubt, to have been a landowner of Bet, though the text is rather vague as to his identity.

At this time information was received that the Sultán was with Bhárá,¹ who had given him shelter near Bhuj which was his capital. The Viceroy drew his forces towards that country. When Bhára heard of this he sent emissaries to beseech the Viceroy not to ravage his territories, as he was ready to surrender Sultán Muzaffar and he eventually did as he had promised. The details of this affair are as follows:—There is a hilly tract about thirty miles from Bhuj where Bhárá had given shelter to the Sultán. When his intentions towards him changed, he sent for a detachment of the Viceroy's men and capturing the Sultán, made him over to them. These men taking the Sultán prisoner, marched towards Morbi. When they reached the town of Dhrole, which is about twenty-three miles from Bhuj on the way to Morbi the Sultán expressing a wish to respond to a call of nature retired to a corner, drew out a razor, which he used to keep with him in his drawers during the predatory life he was obliged to lead and cut his throat and delivered himself from the turmoil and buffets of this mean world. This took place in the year 1000 after the Hijrah (A. D. 1503).

¹ Ráo Bharmal I. of Katch. (A. D. 1585-1631.)

INDEX.

A

Aázam and Muázam, of Khurásán at the court of Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 89 ; their work, 89.

Aázam Humáyún, the relative of Álam Khán, 227 ; cozened by Nisár-ul-mulk, 227, Álam Khán Lodi's half brother, is given Baroda and Chámpáner in fief, 271, 272 ; killed in battle, 275, 276 ; the title of Yúsuf Khán Habshi, 276 ; killed in battle, 281.

Abdul-Kádir, Kázi, 183.

Abdul Karím Khán, entitled I'timád Khán, 237, 285 ; confidence reposed by Sultán Mehmúd III in, 237.

Abdulláh Changál, Sheikh, his shrine near Dhár, 97.

Abdul Latíf Malik Mehmúd Dáwar-ul-mulk, one of the religious nobles of Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 82 ; an attempt on his life, 82 ; his intimacy with Sháh Álam, 83 ; almoner of Sháh Álam, 83 ; appointed Thánédár of Amrún, 83 ; his expedition against Bhuj, 83 ; his probity, 83 ; his death (A. D. 1509), 83 ; his miracles, 84.

Abdul Wahháb Sayad, gives saintliness to Sayad Mubárák, 282.

Abdur Rehmán, younger brother of Sultán Ahmed II, 276 ; is given the title of Sádát Khán and made deputy, 276.

Abdus-Salám Rasúldár, killed in the battle near Maroli, 308.

Abdus Samad, Mián, the counsellor of Sultán Mehmúd III, 264.

Abú—(the fort of) Sultán Kutbuddín sends a force against, 84 ; restored to Krishna Devada (A.D. 1457), 35 ; Rájá of Sirohi plunders merchants at (A. D. 1486-87), 72.

Abú Bakr, the grandson of Firúz Sháh, mounts the throne of Delhi (A.D. 1389), 5 ; struggles for the throne between him and Sultán Muhammad, 5 ; revolt of his army, is imprisoned, 5 ; and dies in prison, 5.

Abú Bakr-al-Midrús, Sayad, leaves Arabia and settles at Ahmedábád (A.D. 1544-45) 241.

Abúji Gujaráti, entitled Násir-ul-mulk, 237.

Abúji Náik, afterwards Wajih-ul-mulk, confidential attendant of Sultán Bahádur, 185.

Abul Fazl, his account of Bahádur's death, 200 (note 4) ; calls Birbal, a Bád-furúsh, 284.

Abu Turáb, Sháh, a man of high intellectual attainments in the court of the Gujarát Sultán, 168.

Áchár, the eldest son of the Jám of Navánagar, in the battle against Khán-i-Aázám, 324, slain in battle, 324.

Adam Sultán Afghán Khán defeated by rebels against Sultán Ahmed (A.D. 1410), 11.

Adhámrá, a village near Jagat, Sultán Mahmúd Begdá at, 61 ; full of snakes, 61.

Adil Khán, alias Malik Násir, the ruler of Asirgarh and Burhánpúr, invades Gujarát ; repelled by Zafar Khán, 6.

Adil Khán Fárúki I, son of Mubárák ; Mahmúd Begdá's campaign against (A. D. 1499), 76 ; dies without male issue, 76.

Adil Khán, the title assumed by Álam Khán, son of Ahsan Khán, supported by Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, 76 ; established in the Government of Asir and Burhánpúr, 77 ; one of the family of Malik Rájá assumes the title of, 76 ; also entitled Aázam Humáyún, 93 ; visits Sultán Musaffar II at Morámlí, 93 ; son-in-law of Sultán Musaffar II, 93 ; sent against the Ráná of Chittaur, 101 ; engaged in the Málwá campaign, 106, returns to Asir, 106.

- Adil Khān, son of Sultān Bahlōl Lodi, in the Court of Sultān Mehmūd, 114; fights with Sultān Ibrāhīm, 115; sees to Bābar at Kābul, 115; persuades Bābar to invade Hindustān, 115; invited by the nobles of Dehli, 115; asks permission to go to Dehli, takes the title of Sultān Alā-ud-dīn, 115.
- Adil Khān, Bahādūr Khān's brother-in-law, 160; of Bījāpur, comes to Sultān Bahādūr with gifts, 161.
- Afzal Khān, at Ahmedābād, 208, 204; his foresight about the conduct of Burhān, 245; treacherously murdered by Burhān (A.D. 1554), 249, 250.
- Agāsī, in the frontier of Gujarāt, Sultān Mehmūd Begda's army at, 74.
- Āgra, place of confinement of Muhammad Zamān Mirzā, 181.
- Ahd-ul-mulk, brother of Āin-ul-mulk, slain in the battle fought near Īdar, 95.
- Ahmed, son of Odū, 806; in the battle near Maroli, 807.
- Ahmedābād, the capital of Gujarāt, the founding of, by Sultān Ahmed, 11; details of the Jāmi' masjid at, 11, 12; Sultān Muhammad buried in Mānek Chowk, 24; Sultān Kutbuddin's buildings at, 33; Sultān Mahmūd Begda's return to, 64; great dome built by Daryā Khān, 78; the Bāgh-i-Shaābān, 87; tomb of Rāni Rūpmanjhri in Mānek Chowk, 89; tomb of Rāni Sarāni near the Asdrīa gate, 89; the mosque of Tāj Khān Sālār near the Jamālpur gate, 90; Bahādūr Khān at, (A.D. 1535), 151, 153; famine at, 155; Bahādūr Khān at, 158; Humāyūn at, 196; under the Mughals, Mughals at, 197; Sultān Bahādūr at, 198; in charge of Mirzā Aniz Kokaltāsh, 310; siege of, 318.
- Ahmed Bahmani (Sultān of the Dakhan) succeeds his father, Sultān Fīrūz, (A.D. 1431) sends presents to Sultān Ahmed of Gujarāt, (A.D. 1422), 21.
- Ahmed Bukhārī, Sayad, saves the life of Sayad Jalāl Bukhārī, 319.
- Ahmed Dandāni, Sheikh, sent to Ālam Khān by Sayad Mubārak, 275.
- Ahmed Khān, son of Tātār Khān born (A.D. 1391), 5; appointed successor to Zafar Khān, 8; sent against Mūsā Khān in Mālwa, 9; sent against the Kōlis of Asāwal 10; poisons Sultān Muzaffar I, 10; succeeds to the throne (A.D. 1410-11), 11; see Ahmed, Sultān.
- Ahmed Khān, son of Sultān Mehmūd Begda, plot to place him on the throne (A.D. 1480), 65; Ahmed Khān, of the tribe of Tānk, a kinsman of Sultān Muzaffar II, 132; becomes enamoured of Dhār, 132; the fate of, 132.
- Ahmed Khān, son of Latif-Khān, and grandson of Sultān Ahmed I, chosen king by the nobles, 254; sits on the throne of Gujarāt with the title of Ahmed Shāh II, (A.D. 1554), 255; as a spiritual follower of Sayad Mubārak, 255.
- Ahmed Khān Bārha, one of the nobles of Akbar, 311; defends Pattan against Muhammad Khān, 311.
- Ahmed Khattū, Sheikh, called also Ahmed Ganjibakhsh, story of him and Sultān Muhammad, 8; his part in founding Ahmedābād, 11; his prophecy, 19; Sultān Ahmed's belief in, 22; the revenues of the shrine of, 25; he dies (A.D. 1445) 23; his tomb at Sarkhej, 8, 44, 78, 117; Sultān Mehmūd Begda visits his tomb, 63, 78; the shrine of, 117; Sultān Muzaffar II buried in the shrine of, 117; Sultān Mehmūd III interred at the shrine of, 251.
- Ahmed Makhdūm, a darvish of Dholka, 269; his prophecy, 269.
- Ahmed, Malik, son of Hisām-ul-mulk Bhandāri, joins the rebellion against Sultān Ahmed I (A.D. 1410-11), 11.
- Ahmed, Mullā, his part in founding Ahmedābād, 11.
- Ahmednagar, on the Hāthmati, built by Sultān Ahmed (A.D. 1427), 19; Sultān Mehmūd Begda at, 52; the battle of, fought between the Rānā of Chittaur and Mubārīs Khān, 109; the Rānā of Chittaur encamps near, 110 and is plundered by him, 110; Nisām-ul-mulk retreats to, before the Rānā of Chittaur, 118; the Musalmāns of, much harassed by the Rānā of Chittaur, 139; in Gujarāt, 159.
- Ahmed, Sheikh, a man of great sanctity, his part in founding Ahmedābād, 11.
- Ahmed Sher (Malik) the rebellion of (A.D. 1414), 13.
- Ahmed, (Sultān) son of Muhammad Shāh, and grandson of Muzaffar Shāh, born (A.D. 1391) 5; (see Ahmed Khān); ascends the throne of Gujarāt (A.D. 1410) 10; Muld-ud-dīn raises revolt against, 11; suppresses rebellion, 11; plans destruction of Asā Bhil, 11; founds the city of Ahmedābād, 11; his expedition against Īdar,

- 13 ; besieges rebels in Modásá, 13 ; Sultán Hoshang makes war upon, 13 ; his efforts for the spread of Islám, 14 ; his campaign against Gírnár, 14 ; takes the fort of Júnágadh, 14 ; his expedition against the temple of Sidhpur, 14, repels invasion of Sultánpur by Násir Khán, 15 ; confederation founded against, 15 ; checks Sultán Hoshang's attempt on Gujarát, 15 ; suppresses Násir Khán's rebellion at Thálnér, 16 ; story of him and Malik Farid, 16 ; his punitive expedition against Málwá, 13, 16, 17, takes Sankhedá and establishes Islám there, 17 ; lays Ohámpánér waste (A.D. 1418), 17 ; repairs the fort of Káreth, and calls it Sultánábád : 17, 18 ; besieges Mesar, 18 ; besieges Mándú 18 ; goes to Ujjain, 18 ; retires on Sárangpur, and grants peace to Hushang, 18 ; is attacked at night by Hushang, 18 ; defeats Sultán Hushang, 19 ; campaign against Idar, 19 ; builds Ahmednagar on the Háthmati, 19 ; remuneration of his soldiery, 20 ; system of finance, 20, 21 ; assists Fíruz Báhmání of the Dakhan (A.D. 1431), 21 ; dies at Ahmedábád (A.D. 1449), 21 ; his character, 22 ; disciple of Sheikh Rukn-ud-dín, his great belief in Sheikh Ahmed Khattú, 22 ; his justice, 22.
- Ahmed II, Sultán, his titles to his nobles, 276 ; makes friends with Imád-ul-mulk, 277 ; tries to obtain power, 278 ; conspires with Imád-ul-mulk, 285 ; the overthrow of, 288.
- Ain-ul-mulk, the father of Násir, the ruler of Asirgar and Burhánpur, 15 ; Jágírdár of Pattan, 95 ; plunders Idar, 95 ; defeated by the Rájá of Idar, 95.
- Ajmer, pilgrimage to, performed by Sultán Muzaffar I, 6 ; fort, 180.
- Áká-Arslán, a Turk from Balkh, 238 ; given the title of Imád-ul-Mulk, 238 ; a slave of Sultán Mehmdú III, 238.
- Áká Mehmdú, defeated by Is-hák, 157.
- Akbar Sháh, emperor of Dehli, at Ahmedábád, 197, 309 ; invades Gujarát (A.D. 1573), 308-311 ; the nobles of Gujarát submit to, 309 ; pursues Mirzá Ibráhím, 310 ; takes Broach, 310 ; returns to Ágrá, 311 ; comes to Ahmedábád and after restoring peace returns to Ágrá (A.D. 1574), 313 ; takes Sayad Hámid with him to Ágrá 313.
- Akram Aázam, Sayad, a religious man, 240.
- Alaf Khán Bhokai, builds a mosque and a stone cistern near Dholká, 78, 87 ; was one of the nobles of Sultán Mehmdú Begdá, 87.
- Alaf Khán Durráni, the Afghán, at the battle of Dáhor, 220.
- Alaf Khán Sanjar founds the fort of Káreth (A.D. 1304), 18.
- Álam, Hazrat Sháh, son of Sayad Burhánuddín, known as Míán Manjhá, 28 ; carries messages between his father and Sheikh Kamál, 28 ; accompanies Sultán Kutb-ud-dín on his expedition against Mehmdú Khilji, 30 ; girds his sword round the waist of Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 30 ; his miraculous arrow, 30 ; offended by Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 32 ; protects Fateh Khán from Sultán Kutb-ud-dín in his early years 36 ; transfigures Fateh Khán, 37 ; his miracles concerning Fateh Khán 37, 38 ; his predictions concerning Rání Rúp Manjheri, 37 ; marries Bibi Mughli, 38.
- Álam Khán Fárúki, killed at the siege of Júnágadh (A.D. 1469), 59 ; son of Ahsan Khán, supported on the throne of Asir by Sultán Mehmdú Begdá, 76 ; becomes Ádil Khán Fárúki II (Q. V.) 77.
- Álam, Khán Khánzádah, seated on the throne of Burhánpur, 76 ; flees to the Dakhan, 77.
- Álam, Sultán Lodi, Bhilsah and Chanderi, entrusted to by Sultán Bahádúr, 176 ; adopted by Nízám-ud-dín Ali Khalifah, 176 ; is ruler of Kálpi under Bábar and revolts against emperor Humáyún, 176 ; defeated, he seeks refuge with Sultán Bahádúr, 176 ; Songadh entrusted to, 191.
- Álam, Khán, management of the state affairs in the hands of, 213 ; story of him and Daryá Khán, 214, 215 ; retires to his estate, 215 ; assists Sultán Mehmdú III, 218 ; leads an army against Daryá Khán, 219 ; but is defeated, 220 ; withdraws to Sádará, 220 ; is made commander-in-chief by Sultán Mehmdú III, 222 ; quarrels with Sultán Mehmdú III for Charji, 223 ; has Charji killed, 224 ; keeps the Sultán in confinement, 225 ; the conspiracy of, for the death of Sultán, Mehmdú III, 225, 226 ; the house of, plundered by the Sultán, 228 ; Kabír Muhammad's warning to, 229, 230 ; flees to Pethápúr, 230 ; corresponds with Daryá Khán, 230 ; asks help from Alif Khán, 231, 232 ; his trick, 232, 233 ; defeated by Sayad Mubárák, 236 ; goes to Shar Sháh of Dehli, 236, 270, 271 ; is given estates in Málwá, 271 ; returns to Gujarát, 271 ; makes his son Qutub Khán a disciple of Sayad Mubárák, 271 ; is given Barodá and Chámpánér, 271 ; goes against Alif Khán Habshi, 272 ; conspires to - overthrow I'timād Khān, 272, 273 ; plots the ruin of Sayad Mubārak, 273, 274 ; but is ruined himself, 275, 276 ; flees to Chāmpāner, 276 ; joins Sher Khān Faulādi, 276 ; returns to Pattan, 276, is killed in battle, 276.

- Ālam Khātūn, Bībī, the wife of Sayad Mirān and daughter-in-law of Sayad Mubārak 265 ; her counsel to her father-in-law, 265.
- Ālam-panāh, Hasrat Shāh Ālam so called, 58.
- Ālam, Sayad, as the spiritual teacher of Sultān Mehmūd III, 240 ; died in (A.D. 1555).
- Ālam Shāh, Malik, the Thānedār of Thāner, entitled Fateh Khān, 77.
- Alā-ud-din (Malik), son of Sohrāb Governor of Sultānābād, besieged by Mehmūd Khilji, 36 ; evasively swears allegiance to Mahmūd Khilji, 26 ; taken into favour and service of Mahmūd Khilji, 27 ; deserts Mahmūd Khilji, he joins Sultān Kutb-ud-din, 80.
- Alā-ud-din Sultān, son of Sultān Muhammad bin Fīrūz Shāh, succeeds to the throne of Dehli (A.D. 1894), 6 ; dies (A.D. 1894), 6 ; the title of Humāyūn Khān, the son of Sultān Muhammad, 6 ; first introduces Islām in Gujarāt, 14.
- Alā-ud-dīn, Sultān, of Dehli, title of Ādil Khān, 115 ; Alā-ud-din brother of Sikander Lodi, at the battle of Dāhor, 220 ; takes service under Sultān Bahādūr, 220 ; the death of, proposed to Sultān Mehmud III by Charji, 222 ; and consequently crucified, 222.
- Al-Fārūk, Mubārak Shāh, the offspring of, 257, note ; the surname of Umar Ibnul Khattāb, the great Khalīfah, 257, note.
- Ali, accomplice of Imād-ul-Mulk in the murder of Sultān Sikandar ; torn to pieces by Bahādūr's orders, 155.
- Alif Khān, son of Alā-ud-din bin Sohrāb, Governor of Morāsā, his revolt against Sultān Mehmūd Begdā is forgiven and restored, 74, 75 ; Alif-Khān Dāwar-ul-Mulk and Kaisar Khān beheaded for complicity with the rebel Prince Latif Khān (A.D. 1525), 156 ; joins Sultān Bahādūr's army, 173, 174 ; entrusted with Islāmābād, Hushang-ābād and other Mālwa territories by Bahādūrahāh, 177 ; attendant of Sultān Bahādūr, killed by the Firangis, 199, 200 ; story of him and Daryā Khān, 214, 215 ; retires to his estates, 215.
- Alif Khān Habashi, goes over to the side of Sayad Mubārak, 266 ; dependencies of Jhalāwār assigned to, 271, 272 ; Baroda given to, 270 ; causes disturbance in the kidgdom, 272 ; is defeated at Virangām, 272 ; at Dholkā with Sayad Mirān, 272, takes refuge with Sayad Mubārak, 272 ; the district of Bahyal given to, 272 ; dies ; 287 ; defeated by Changiz Khān, 287 ; quarrels with him, 292 ; murders Changiz Khān, 301 ; gets possession of Ahmedābād, 301 ; invites I'timād Khān, 301 ; submits to Akbar, 309 ; imprisoned by him, 309.
- Alif Khān Khatri, the district of Godhrā given to, 272.
- Ali Hamadāni, Sayad, Sheikh Kamāl-ud-din, the follower of, 241.
- Ali Jāmdār, ambassador from Sultān Hushang to Sultān Ahmed, 17.
- Ālmpur, a hamlet to the south of Ahmedābād, populated by Khudāvand Khān Ālīm, 87.
- Alp Khān Khatri, story of him and Daryā Khān, 214, 215 ; retires to his esate, 215 ; at the battle of Dāhor, 220 ; at Uklesar, 231 ; at Broach, 231.
- Alp Khān of Mālwa, son of Dilāwar Khān, Sultān Mahmūd seeks aid from, 7 ; Sultān Muzaffar's campaign against, 9 ; kept in confinement by Sultān Muzaffar, 9 ; released and restored to power, 9.
- Ami Chand Mānek Rāi, sent to the relief of Nagor, 34.
- Amīa Kamāl, Malik, the poet, descendant of Malik Sārang, 88 ; companion of Sultān Bahādūr, 88 ; a poet and wit, 224 ; the puns of, 224, 225.
- Amīa Khān Ghori, Wazīr Khān appointed against, 313 ; Fateh Khān's expedition against, 314 ; asks the aid of the Jām, 314 ; defeats Mirzā Khān, 314 ; son of Tātār Khān Ghori, 321 ; Sultān Muzaffar seeks help from, 321 ; dies, 323 ;.
- Amīn Malik, sent by Bahādūr against Parīnda, 163.
- Amīn Nās, Malik, Governor of Ranthambhor, march of, to Gujarāt to help Bahādūr 197 ; attendant of Bahādūr and killed by the Firangis (A.D. 1536), 199, 200.
- Amīn, Sīdī, house-born slave of Jhujhār, Khān, 285 ; Imād-ul-Mulk in charge of, 285.
- Amin-ul-Mulk, introduces Sheikh Sirāj-ud-din to Sultān Mehmūd Begdā, 48, 49.

- Amír Ali Shér, minister of Husein Mirzá, the ruler of Khurásán, 46.
 Amír Sayad Sháh Kamál, a great Sayad, 240.
 Amír Teimúr (Tamerlane), died (A.D. 1404), 8.
 Amrún, a village ten kos from Morvi in the District of Jháláwár, 88; Abdal Latíf Malik Mehmúd, Thánedár of, 88; Dáwar-ul-Mulk at, 88.
 Angolia, the name of a well at Junágadh, 54.
 Ankus Khán Habashi, the agent of Imád-ul-Mulk, 275.
 Ansári, or helpers, the origin of, 208, note.
 Áonlas (phyllanthus emblica), grow in Gujarát, 47.
 Apá Khán, son of Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, and Ráni Saráni, poisoned by his father's order, 89.
 Árshah Khán, grandson of I'tibár-ul-Mulk, flees to Dholká, 291.
 Arám, the Kashmirean the author of Tuhfat-us-Sádát, 286.
 Ari, the name of a step-well at Junágadh, 54.
 Árshah, Sayad, the son of Sayad Záhíd and grandson of Kutb-ul-Aktáb, conducts Imád-ul-Mulk to the Sultán, 233, 234; descendant of Kutbi Álam, 240.
 Ásá Bhíl, Sultán Ahmed I, plans his destruction, 11.
 Asad, Malik, chief equerry of Sultán Mahmúd Begdá plunders the Chámpáner territory, 65; defeated by Ráwal Patái, Rájá of Chámpáner, 65.
 Asad-ul-Mulk, slain in the battle during the Rána's raid on Ahmednagar, 110; also called Sheikhji Támim, one of the Sultán Muzaffar II's nobles, 122; takes Sayad Jalál before the Sultán, 122.
 Ásaf Khán, sent against Hisám-ud-dín of Burhánpúr, 77; left in Málwá to support Mahmúd Khilji, 106; the Vazir of Sultán Bahádur, 237; sent to Makkah by him 237; is made grand Vazir by Sultán Mehmúd III, 237; treacherously killed by Burhán (A.D. 1554), 248, 249.
 Ásaf Khán, Sultán Bahádur sends against Vágadh, 164.
 Asaspúr, the suburb of Ahmedábád, between Rasúlábád and Batwá 88; (now known as Isanpúr) a hamlet populated by Imád-ul-Mulk Ásas, 88.
 Asaspur, produces sweet smelling Moghra, 88; called by Sháh Álam Karím-ut-tarafain, 88.
 Asáwal, Zafar Khán retires into private life at, 8; Sultán Muhammad ascends the throne of Gujarát at, 8; rebellion of the Kolis of, 10; Sultán Ahmed I, at, 11; Ahmedábád; founded near, 11.
 Ashraf Humáyún Burhán-ul-mulk Bunyáni, a pious man, is given the post of minister by Sultán Mehmud III., 221; anecdote of, 221, 222.
 Ashrafuddin Husein, Mirza, grandson of Khwájah Ahrár comes to Sher Khán, 293.
 Ashraf-ul-mulk, release of, from Mándu fort, 157.
 Áshta, district of, 170; Bahádur Sháh restores to Hasan Khán of Mándu, 171.
 Asir, Násir Khán, ruler of, 15; Sultán Mehmúd Begdá's campaign against, 75; Adil Khán Fárúki I., the ruler of, 75; Adil Khán Fárúki II., the ruler of, 77, 199. Mubarak Sháh withdraws to the fort of, 211.
 Askari, Mirza, 198.
 Ashkmal, placed in charge of Mandesúr by the Rána of Chittaur, 118.
 Ashria, gate of Ahmedábád, Ráni Saráni's tomb situated near, 89.
 Atak Khán, sent by Násir-ul-mulk to win Hasan Khán Dakhni over to his side, 263; his attempt on the life of Sayad Mubarak, 263.
 Atá-ulláh, Sayad (styled Kivám-ul-mulk), discovering Sultán Muhammad's cowardice, procures his death, and raises Jalál Khán to the throne, 25, 26; ordered by Sultán Kutb-ud-din to proceed to the aid of the ruler of Nágor, 33.
 Ayás, Malik, originally a slave, one of the great nobles of Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, 84; his victory over the Portuguese at Chawal (Chaul), 75; his great power and wealth, 84; undertakes campaign against Rána of Chittaur, 85, 111; besieges Mandesur, 86, 113; dies (A. D. 1523), 86, 114; his works at Din, 84, his liberal hospitality, 86,

- 88; his three sons, 86; and their fate, 86; becomes the Governor of Sorath, 111; disaffection of the Amirs with, 118; comes to terms with the Rána of Chittaur, 118; in disgrace, 114; his son Is-hák succeeds him, 114; his son Mañk Tughá (q. v) 164.
- Ayeshah, Rájá, the daughter of Sultán Musaffar II and Bībī Ráni, 186; married to Fatch Khán, 186.
- Asam Khán, son of Pírd, 151.
- And-ul-mulk, the title of Chánd bin Ismáíl, 43; title of Malik Háji conferred by Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, 45; title of Malik Kutb, 91; the leper sent to Modásá by Imád-ul-mulk, 151; is sent by Imád-ul-mulk to Barodá to check the advance of Bahádúr Khán, 153; joins Latíf Khán against Bahádúr Khán, 155; his defeat and flight of, 157.
- Asim Khán, the title of Suleimán Afghán 18.
- Asir Koká, Mirza, a viceroy of Akbar at Ahmedábád, 310; sent against Sher Khán, 311. defeats him near Pattan, 311; made viceroy of Gujarát by Akbar 311.
- Azís-ul-mulk, the fief-holder of Sultánpur and Nazarbár, sent against Hisám-ud-din of Burhánpur, 76.
- Azís-ul-mulk, Malik Ahmed at the siege of Morásá, 12.
- Azmatulláh, Sayad, the second Kutb, a descendant of Kutbi Álam, 240.

B

- Bábá-Beg, Jaldír, father of Sháhám Khán Jaldír, Humáyún's General at Chámpañer, 197.
- Bábar—Petition to, by Imád-ul-mulk; engagement of, with Ibráhim Lodi at Páñipat, 150.
- Bábar Pádsháh, 176.
- Bádfurush—Persian name for Bháts or Chárans, 234.
- Bádhel, the name of a Rájput tribe, 225; pun on the word; 225.
- Badr-i-áls—instigates revolt in Idar against Sultán Ahmed I, 12; his treachery at Morásá, 12; killed at Morásá (A. D. 1411) 13.
- Badr Khán, the son of Sher Khán, 309.
- Badrud-dín, given the title of Maudúd-ul-Mulk, 152.
- Bahádúr Ghiláni, a Dakhni noble brought up by Khájah Mehmúd Gáwán, in rebellion at Dáhol, 73; cause of his hostility to Gujarát, 73, 74; Sultán Mehmúd Begdá's expedition against, 74; his end, 74.
- Bahádúr Khán, son of Prince Khalíl Khán and grandson of Sultán Mehmúd Begdá remains with his grandfather at Muhammadábád, 77; Sultán Mehmúd Begdá's prayers for, 77; favourite of his grandfather Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, 77; petitions his father about the revenues of his jágir, 113; his conflict with the Mughals, 115; Sultán Ibráhim sends for, 116. Sultán Ibráhim's jealousy towards, 115; sets out for Jaunpúr, 116; returns to Gujarát, 116; at Wágár (Baksar), 116; goes to Sultán Ibráhim, 116. son of Sultán Musaffar II., 135; and Lakshmi Báí, 136; granted a Jágir, 136; his life at Batwá, 136; departure of, to Hindustán (A. D. 1524), 139; his vow, 139; the last meeting of Saint Sheikhji with, 140; at Chittaur, 140. story concerning him and the nephew of the Rána of Chittaur, 140.
- Bahádúr Sháh, Sultán, formally ascends the throne on the 14th of Zil-Kaád H. 932 (A. D. 1525), gives one year's pay to his soldiers, on the 14th of Zil-Kaád H. 932 (A. D. 1525), makes Táji Khán his minister at the same time; resources of Gujarát, under, 31; his military glory, 46; he orders the death of a bath servant (Aftab-ohi) for his mistake, 123; giver of gold, 125; kills Názukeyher in a fit of anger, 147-148; at Jaunpúr; leaves Sultán Ibráhim Lodi, 150; meeting of, with Páýindah Khán at Páñipat, 150; invited by the nobles of Jaunpúr to be their king, and receives the news of the death of Sultán Sikandar of Gujarát, 150; leaves Páýindahkhán and marches to Gujarát, 150; receives news of the murder of Sultán Sikander from Sayad Sher at Chittaur, 150; at Dúngar-púr; meeting of Táji Khán of Dhandúka, 150; assumes the umbrella of royalty at Nahr-Wálá (Pattan, North Gujarát) on the 26th of Ramazán H. 932 (A. D. 1525) and marches to Ahmedábád, 151; at Morásá, 151; at Singárgaon, 151; at Ahmedábád, 151; at Muhammadábád, 153; march to Nadiád, 153; sends Táji-Khán after Imád-ul-mulk, 154; bestows honours upon Táji-Khán, 154; admits Khudá-wand Khán to his presence, 154; Latíf Khán raises a rebellion, against, with help of Hinda chiefs, 155; frustrates the attempts of Latíf Khán with Hindu chiefs to oust him from Gujarāt, 155; his measures of, to cope with famine, 155; sends Ghāzi Khān to crush the rebellion of Latif Khān, 156; sends Mughibb-ul-Mulk to bring Latif Khān, 157; orders Tāj Khān to pillage and burn Pāi, 157; at Cambay, receives information about the disaffection of Is-hāk, son of Malik Ayāz (1526 A. D.), 150, at Diu, 158; marches from Cambay hastily against Is-hāk, son of Malik Ayāz, who, on the Sultān's arrival, quickly retires across the Sorath frontier to the Rann, 158; entrusts Diu to Kiwām-ul-Mulk, 158; entrusts Jūnā-gadh to Mujāhid-Khān Bhikāni, 158; at Ahmedābād, 158; receives presents from Rāna Sānga, 158; the rapidity of his movements, 159; orders the construction of city walls at Broach, 159; goes to Diu and offers the choice of Islām to the Portuguese captured, 159; his meeting with Jaāfar Khān, son of Imād-ul-Mulk at Baroda, 160; at Nazarbār, his interview with Imād-ul-Mulk and Muhammad Khān, 160; strength of his army during the Dakhan expedition, 161; defeats Nizām Shāh of the Dakhan at Daulatābād, marches towards Bīdar, 161; receives agents of Nizām-ul-Mulk of Ahmednagar, Barīd of Bīdar, Adilkhān of Bijāpur, and Khudāwand Khān of Battri with kingly presents, 161; makes peace between Nizām-ul-Mulk and Imād-ul-Mulk of Kāwel, 161; returns to Muhammadābad (1528 A. D.), 162; entertains and promises Jām Firūz, King of Sindh, to restore his country to him, 162; gives Narsingh Deva service and estates, 162; makes Prathirāj, brother of Rānā Sānga, a vassal, 162; orders an army for an expedition against the Dakhan, 162; The Sultān at Dubhoi on his way to the Dakhan, 162; at Dubhoi, meeting of, with Muhammad Khān Asrī, 162; meets Imād-ul-Mulk of Kāwel, 162; admits Baharji Rājā of Baglāna to the honor of kissing his carpet and gives him two ruby ear-rings, marries one of his sisters, and gives another to his nephew Muhammad Khān, 162; at Bālāghāt, 163; sends Malik Amīn against the City of Parinda, 163; sends Kaiser Khān in pursuit of Nizām-ul-Mulk Bahri, Barīd, Khwajah Jahān and Khudāwand Khān, 163; sends Muhammad Khān Asrī to join Kaiser Khān, 163; arrives at Muhammadābad (1531 A. D.), 164; organizes an expedition to conquer Wāghar (1529 A. D.), 164; sends Khān Aāzam, Asaf Khān and Vazīr Khudāwand Khān against Wāghar, 164; entrusts Diu to the charge of Malik Tūghā, son of Ayāz, 164; admits Fatch Khān, Kutb Khān, and Umār Khān, Afghāns of the Lodhi tribe and relations of Sultān Bahlūl to an audience, 164; admits Sikandar Khān and Bhūpat Rāi to the honour of kissing his carpet, 165; at Naālchah, 166; at Mehmūd-pūr, 166; takes the fort Songad-Chittauri (A.D. 1529-30), 167; defeats Habīb Khān, a noble of Sultān Mehmūd of Mālwa, 167; besieges and forgives Sultān Mehmūd with his seven sons, sends them to Gujarāt in custody of Ikbāl Khān and Asaf Khān (1530-31 A. D.), 167; goes in the direction of Burhānpūr and Asir (A. D. 1531), 168; receives Shāh Tāhīr Dakhani on the part of Nizām-ul-Mulk, 168; bestows the title of Shāh on Nizām-ul-Mulk, 169; sends Malik Amīn to Bāisen to fetch Silahdi, 170; his arrangements for march against Silahdi, 170; at Dībalpūr for hunting, 170; at Dhār (1531 A. D.), 170; receives Ikhtiyār Khān, who comes with a great army and treasure, 171; sends Imād-ul-Mulk against the son of Silahdi and marches to Ujjein himself (1531 A. D.), 171; gives Ujjein to Daryākhān of Māndu, 171; restores the Ashta district to Hasan Khān of Māndu, 171; gives Sārangpūr to Mallu Khān, 171; at Bhilsa, sends Muhammad Shāh Asrī and I'timād Khān against the Chittaur Rājā's son, 173; captures the fortress of Chittaur, fights with Silahdi the Rajpūt, and is victorious (1531 A. D.), 174-75; bestows all the ornaments of the women of Silahdi on Burhān-ul-Mulk Bunyāni and his acceptance of them (1531 A. D.), 175; entrusts Bhilsa and Chanderi to Sultān Ālam Lodhi, 176; orders Muhammad Shāh Asrī to march and capture Gāgraon taken by the Rāna, 176; captures the fort of Konūr, 177; entrusts Hushangābād and other Mālwa territories to Alif Khān, 177; sends Imād-ul-Mulk to Mandasūr, 177; at Diu, 177; at Cambay, visits the shrines of his ancestors 177; at Batwah, visits the tomb of Saint Sheikhji grandson of Kutb-ul-Aktāb, 177; orders Khudāwand Khān and Muhammad Shāh Asrī to march on to Chittaur, 178; enlists an army at Betwa and sends it to Māndu 178; at Māndu, orders Muhammad Khān Asrī and Khudāwand Khān to march on to Chittaur, 178; rejects the petition of the Rāna of Chittaur to subscribe to any terms the Sultān might impose and lays siege to Chittaur (A. D. 1532), 178; obtains all the jewels of Sultān Mahmūd Khilji which had fallen into the hands of Rāna Sānga from the old Rāni of Chittaur; receives ten millions of tankas, and also a portion of Mālwa from Vikramājī and makes peace with him, 178; at Māndu, 180; sends forces against Ajmer and Ranthambhor, 180; sends Muhammad Shāh Fārūki against Nizām-ul-Mulk Dakhni, 180; victory of, at Chittaur (A. D. 1534), 187; surrounded by Humāyūn near Chittaur, 188; dis-

- culties of, on being besieged near Chittaur (1584 A. D.), 189; flies to, Mándu (1581 A. D.), 189; besieged at Mándu by Humáyún, 191; flight of, from Mándu, pursued by the Mughals, 191; at Chámpaner, leaves Ikhtiyár Khán and Rája Narsingh Deva in charge and goes to Diu, 193; pursues Násir Mírza as far as Mehmúdábád 197; defeats the Mughals at Mehmúdábád and drives them out of Gujarát, 198; returns to Ahmedábád, 198; his last visit to Diu and treacherous murder of, by the Portuguese at Diu (1586 A. D.), 199-200; account of the assassination of, 200; the cause of the death of, 201.
- Bahádur Sháhi, the, an historical work, 178-79; name of a martyr, 193.
- Bahádur-ul-Mulk given the title of Alif Khan, 152.
- Bahár, an accomplice of Imád-ul-Mulk, 143; the murderer of Sultán Siakndar, ordered to be flayed alive, 155.
- Bahar, Rája of Baglana, receives title of Bahr-Khán from Sultán Bahádur and goes against the port of Chaul at his order, 163.
- Baharji, Rája of Baglana, gains the favour of kissing Sultan's carpet, gives his sister to Bahádur in marriage and another to Muhammad Khán Asiri, 162.
- Bahá-ud-din, Malik, made Imád-ul-Mulk, 52; appointed to Sankheda Bahádurpúr, 59; discovers conspiracy against Mahmúd Bagda, 55.
- Bahá-ul-Mulk, son of Alaf Khán, murders a trooper, 52 (see Alá-ud-din); styled Imád-ul-Mulk, appointed to the Thánedari of Sankheda, 59.
- Bahá-ul-Mulk with Dáwur-ul-mulk, the two chief confederate nobles in Khush-Kadam-Imád-ul-Mulk's conspiracy go over to Sultán Bahádur, 152.
- Bahlól Lodi, Sultán, plunders Chanderi, 104. Ádil Khán, the son of, 114.
- Bahlólpur, batteries of Sultán Bahádur at, 166.
- Bág-márs or, Tiger Slayers, the regiment of, 248; formed by Sultán Mahmud III, 248;
- Bágar or Wágadh to the East of Ídar, 108; the village of Rahmúláh under, 112; the Rána of Chittaur at, 108; Rájá of, joins the Rána of Chittaur in attack on Ahmed-nagar, 112; his country ravaged by the Gujarát army, 112.
- Bairám-bin-Masúd Malik, servant of Sikandar, 143.
- Bakkál, Muháfiz Khán, a great Gujarát noble, appointed by Imád-ul-Mulk Khush Kadam to hold the out-post of Dhánaj.
- Banás (or Beyas), a village under Sultánpúr and Nazarbár, the birth place of Malik Ládán Khújji, 77; bestowed on Malik Ládán Khiji, 77.
- Banhari or Battri, Imád-ul-Mulk, besieged at (1528 A. D.), 160.
- Bánawála, or Bánswára, 154.
- Bánswára, the Rája of, defeated by the Musalmáns, 112.
- Bári Narsangpúr, I'timád Khán, encamps near, 216.
- Barid of Bídár comes to Bahádur with gifts, 161. Barid's daughter marries Imád-ul-Mulk, Sultán Bahádur overlooks his fault at the recommendation of Imád-ul-Mulk, 163.
- Barid, place of Imád-ul-Mulk.
- Barji Sidi, house-born slave of Jhujhár Khán Habashi, 235; Imád-ul-Mulk in charge of, 235.
- Baroda, Moid-ud-din Fírúz Khán, ruler of, revolts against Sultán Ahmed III., Mahmúd Khilji plunders 87. Sultán Muzaffar II., at, 116; Prince Latif Khán goes to, 117; tomb of Sháh Táhir in, 117; as the Jágir of Sultán Muzaffar II. (Khalil Khán), 118; camp of Bahádur Sháh at, 160; revenues of, 302; given to Nawáb Aurang Khán, 319; besieged by Sultán Muzaffar III., 318; and taken 319.
- Bassein, on the frontier of Gujarát, Sultán Mahmúd Begda's army at, 74; Sultán Mahmúd Begda's expedition to, 75.
- Bát Singár, one of the best elephants of Mubáarak Shah, 211; falls into the hands of Sultán Mahmúd III., 211.
- Bathri—Khudáwánd Khán of, comes to Sultán Bahádur with kingly gifts, 161.
- Batwa, the Shrine of Saint Kurb-i-Álam at, 184; a village granted as an estate to the offspring of Kutbul-Aktáb, 186; Sháh Budha, def-holder of, does not go to

- Sultán Sikandar, 148; Sultán Bahádúr at, to visit the tomb of Saint Sheikhji, grandson of Kutbul-Aktáb, 177; tomb of Hazrat Kutbul Aktáb, Sayad Burhán-uddín at, 196; Humáyún goes to, 196.
- Báwan—Bír, one of the best elephants of Mubárák Sháh, 211; falls into the hands of Sultán Mahmúd III, 211.
- Báz—Bahádúr, the Afghán King of Málwa, being defeated by the army of Akbar, enters the service of Changíz Khán, 296; at the siege of Cambay, 312, 313.
- Bázdár Khán, Násir-us-Saif, at the siege of Morásá (A. D. 1412), 12.
- Behráw Khán, Prince of Sind, a descendant of Tamím Ansári, 208; the daughter of, married to Latíf Khán, son of Sultán Muzaffar II., 208.
- Bels (Aegle-marmelos), to be found in Gujarát, 47.
- Bhadra Citadel (the), Sultán Bahádúr puts up at, on his first entrance into Ahmedábád 151; residence of the ancestors of Bahádúr Khán at Ahmedábád, 151; the royal palaces of Ahmedábád, 307.
- Bhán korah, a village on the frontier of Gujarát, ten kos from Dohad, Sultán Mehmúd, Khilji at, 98; Sultán Muzaffar II. encamps at, 100.
- Bhárá, the name of the Jám, 323; Ráo Bhármal of Katch, 327; gives shelter to Sultán Muzaffar III., 327; makes him over to Khán-i-Aázam, 327.
- Bhármal, son of Bhím, expelled from Ídar by Ráimál, 97.
- Bháts, a class of mendicant Hindus, 234.
- Bhílss, the country of, converted to Islám by Sultán Shamsuddin, King of Dehli, 171; held by Silahdi for eighteen years, 171; Sultán Bahádúr restores Islám in, 171; entrusted to Sultán Álám Lodi by Sultán Bahádúr, 176.
- Bhilwára—Batteries of Sultán Bahádúr at, 186.
- Bhím, son of Sagar, Rájá of Jagat, his fate, 63.
- Bhím, son of Bhán, Rájá of Ídar, defeats Ain-ul-Mulk near Ídar, 25; Malik Gopi obtains forgiveness of, 96.
- Bhím—Rájá of Munga, supports Latíf Khán against his brother Sultán Sikandar, 141.
- Bhím—Rájá of Pál, with two others of the refractory nobles of Gujarát, joining with Prince Latíf Khán, raids some of the Sultánpúr villages; is engaged by Gházi Khán and slain in battle, 157; in rebellion against Bahádúr with Latíf Khán, slain in an engagement with Gházi Khán (1525 A. D.) 157.
- Bhuj, the capital of Ráo Bhármal I, of Katch, 327.
- Bhímkarán, sent by Medáni Rái to defend Mándu, on his behalf, 103; put to death by Mahmúd Khilij at Karwan (A. D. 1520), 106; escapes at the taking of Mándu, 106.
- Bhúpat-rái, son of Silahdi comes to Sultán Bahádúr, 165; Bahádúr's general at Chittaur, 179; opens gates of Mándu to Humáyún under the advice of Rúmi-khán, 191.
- Bjáwal, place of the confinement of Mahmúd Sháh III., 105.
- Bíbí-Mughlí, daughter of Jám Júná, betrothed to Sháh Álám, but married to Sultán Muhammad, 38; becomes mother of Fateh Khán and takes shelter with Bífí Mirghi, the wife of Sháh Álám, 36; subsequently married to Sháh Álám, 38; secures the throne to her son Mahmúd Begdá, 41.
- Bífí Ráni, mother of Prince Sikandar Khán, dies, 114; her burial place, 114; her character, 114; wife of Sultán Muzaffar II., 136; children of the Sultán by her, 136.
- Bídar, Sikandar Khán withdraws to, 50; besieged by Sultán Mehmúd, 50.
- Bídar—Barid, ruler of, comes to Bahádúr with kingly gifts, 161; the Sultán's march towards, 161.
- Bíjápúr—Ádil Khán of, comes to Bahádúr with kingly gifts, 161.
- Bijli-Khán, the Abyssinian, officer of Changíz Khán, 294; in battle against I'timád Khán, 294; brought up by Changíz Khán's father, 300; the port of Cambay bestowed on, 300; is offended, 300; instigates the murder of Changíz Khán, 300.
- Bír—Battle at, between Nizám-ul-Mulk Dakhni and Bahádúr, peace of, between them 180;
- Bísánagar, the Ráná of Chittaur encamps near, 110.

- Bijāna—Engagement of Tātār Khān, with Mirzā-Hindāl at, defeat and death of the former, 186.
- Blochman's Ain-i-Akbari, references to, 20, 28, 91, 284, 310.
- Bombay, the Portuguese Viceroy, Nuno da Cunha, forms an expedition at, 177.
- Bombay Gazetteer, references to, 1, 34, 52, 187, 200, 262, 302, 309.
- Brahmans of Nariād slay one of Mehmūd Khilji's elephants, 27; those of Wadnagar, spared by the Bāna of Chittaur, 110.
- Brājāri, the name of a step-well at Jūnāgadh, 54.
- Broach, invested by Sultān Ahmed, 11; Mahmūd Khilji intrigues for the possession of, 27; Sultān Bahādūr pays a visit to, to see the progress of the construction of the City walls of, 159; under the Mughals, 197; Alp Khān and Imād-ul-Mulk at, 281; castle of, besieged by the Mirzās, 302; the revenues of, 302; taken by Akbar 310; given in fief to Nawwāb Qutbuddīn Muhammad, 313; taken by Sultān Muzaffar III, 319; besieged by the Mālwa army, 321; and taken, 321.
- Budāgh-Khān, Shāh, sent against Shēr Khān, 311.
- Budha Shāh, see Mehmūd Sayad.
- Budham sent by Medāni Rai to defend Māndū, 100; his fate, 106.
- Bukhārī, the one of the most authentic works on the traditions of the Prophet, 243, Sayada, the army of, kept up by Sayad Mubārak, 253.
- Burbāni (Parantiji?) the Kasba of Mubārīz-ul-Mulk and the author of the Tārīkh-i-Bahādūr Shāhi at, 111; Gujarātī army at 111.
- Burbān, origin and rise of, 245; caught in sodomy, 246; Afzal Khān intercedes for 246; caught again in sodomy, 247; poisons and kills the Sultān (A. D. 1554), 248; worshipped by the Hindus, 239; kills Āsaf Khān, 243, 249; murders many ministers and nobles (A. D. 1554), 249; paves the way for the fall of the Kingdom of Gujarāt, 249; kills Afzal Khān, 249, 250; becomes King himself, 250; is immediately killed by Shirwān Khān (A. D. 1554), 250.
- Burbān-Malik, entitled Mansūr Khān, 91.
- Burbānpūr, Nasir, son of Eyn-ul-Mulk, ruler of, 15; Hisāmuddīn, and Lādan Khilji, rulers of, 76; Ālam Khān, entitled Ādil Khān, becomes the ruler of 77; battle between the Dakhan nobles and Muhammad Khān's army at, 163; Mubārak Shāh, the King of, 211; Sultān Mehmūd III at, 211.
- Burbānpūr, 197.
- Burbān-ud-dīn, Sayad, known as Kutbi-Ālam, father of Sayad Mehmūd and grand-father of Sayad Jalāl, 140.
- Burbān-ud-dīn Bukhārī, Sayad, also known as Kutbi-Ālam, 120.
- Burbān-ul-Mulk Bunyāni, Malik, governor of Ajmer, 197; march of, to Gujarāt to help Bahādūr Shāh, 197.

C

- Cambay—complaints of the people of, against Rāsti-Khān's oppression, (A.D. 1391) 11 Rāsti-Khān's rebellion at (A. D. 1410-11), 11; Sultān Mehmūd Begda at, 68; Ma'ik-ut-Tujjār's daughter defended by the people of, against the designs of Bahādūr Gilāni, 74; Sultān Bahādūr at, 158, 177; the author of the Tārīkh-i-Bahādūr Shāhi, the governor of, 160; The Emperor Humáyūn at, 196; bestowed by Changiz Khān as estate on his mother, 300; The Emperor Akbar at, 310 the siege of, by the Gujarāt nobles, 312; held by Sayad Daulat, 318.
- Champā-Bái, the dancer of Sultān Muzaffar II., 130; takes the difficult part of Sarasvati, the Hindu Minerva, 130.
- Chāmpāner—Sultān Mehmūd Begda takes the fort of, 42, 46; makes it his capital, 67; builds a mosque in and a fort around, 67. Trimbakdās-Rajā of, 16; Sultān Ahmad's campaign against, 17; laid waste by Sultān Ahmed, 17; Sultān Muhammad's unsuccessful expedition against, 24; country ravaged by the Gujarāt army, 64; plundered, 65; the conquest of, by Mehmūd Begda (A. D. 1483-84), 66, 67; renamed Muhammadābād by him, 67; Saint Shāhji at, 138; Bahādūr Khān at, 159; capture of, by Humáyūn (A. D. 1535), 195; under the Mughals, 197; Darya Khān sends his women and treasures to, 221; besieged by Sultān Mehmūd III, 221; Ālam Khān flees to, 276.

- Chánd, the son of Ismáíl, surnamed Azd-ul-Mulk conspires against Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 42.
- Chánd Khán—Bhandári, is given the title of Hizabr Khán, 153.
- Chánd Khán—son of Sultán Muzaffar II. by a concubine and half-brother of Sultán Bahádúr, 135-136; takes refuge with the Máíwa Sultán; his rendition asked by Bahádúr, 150; takes refuge with the Portuguese at Goa, 166.
- Chánd, Sheikh—an Amír of Máíwa seeks refuge at the Court of Sultán Muzaffar II. from the oppression of Medáni Rái, 98.
- Chanderi—plundered by the army of Behlúl-Lodi, 104. Entrusted to Sultán Álám Lodi by Sultán Bahádúr, 176.
- Changízí—a coin, Note, 301.
- Changíz Khán—son of Imád-ul-Mulk, plunders the baggage of Mubarak Sháh's army 276; called from Broach, 285; besieges Khudáwand Khán, 283; cedes Dún and Sanján (Damaun and St. John) to the Portuguese, 286; kills Khudáwand Khán 286; defeats Alif Khán and Jhujár Khán Habashis, 287; retires to Broach, 287; defeated by 'Imád Khán, flees to Ahmedábád, 293; ascends the throne of Gujarát, 295; his generosity, 295; his justice, 295; defeats Muhammad Sháh of Khándesh, 299; the son of a slave of Sultán Mehmúd III., 295; murdered by the Habashis (A. D. 1568), 300-301.
- Chárans, a class of mendicant Hindus in Káthiáwár and Gujarát, 234.
- Charkas Khán, Rúmi, intrigues with Sultán Muzaffar, 318; is in charge of Broach, 320; beheaded, 321.
- Charji, the bird-catcher, the favourite of Sultán Mehmúd III., 218; is sent to Álám Khán at Dhandúka, 218; ennobled with the title of Muháfiz Khán, 218-222; his character, 222; proposes the death of Sultán Alá-ud-dín and Malik Shujáát Khán to the Sultán, 222; his bad counsel to Sultán Mehmúd III., 223; despised by the nobles, 223; killed by the nobles, 224; pun on the name of his tribe, 224.
- Cháush, a petty Arab Officer, 296.
- Chaul (Cheval), the Seimúr of Al-Masúdi, A. D. 915), Sultán Mehmúd Begda's expedition to, 75; the Firangís defeated by Malik Ayáz at, 75; Bharji entitled Bahar Khán sent against the port of, 162.
- Chittaur, a desperate battle fought near, 35; besieged by Sultán Kutb-ud-din, 35; Rána Sága, Rája of, 97; Prince Bahádúr Khán at, 115-140, 150; fall of, foretold by Sháh Sheikhji, 139; capital of Mevát, 159; captured by Sultán Bahádúr (A. D. 1531.), 174-175; Rúmi Khán sent against, 185; siege of, by Bahádúr Sháh (A. D. 1532), 178-179-186; fall of, (A. D. 1534), 187; Rána of, defeated by Háji Khán, the Afghán, 279; story of the Rána of, 290.
- Chronogram, of the building of the Jámi' Mosque at Ahmadábád, 11; of the death of Saint Sheikh Ahmed Khatú, 23; of the death of Saint Sháh Álám, 63; of the birth of Sultán Muzaffar II., 89; of the conquest of Mándú, 101, 102; of the death of Sultán Bahádúr, 189-201; of the death of Mehmúd Mí., 251; of Isám Sháh, 252; of Nizám-ul-Mulk Bahri, 252; on the beginning of the administration of Daryá Khán, 211; of the death of Sultán Ahmed II., 289; of Akbari's invasion of Gujarát, 309.

D

- Dabhoi, Sultán Bahádúr at, on his way to the Dakhan, 162.
- Dábol, Bahádúr Gílání, in rebellion at, 73; Sultán Mehmúd Begda's expedition against, 74.
- Dáhor, a village under Dholka, the situation of, 219; battle near (A. D. 1543), 219; account of the battle of, 219, 270.
- Dakhan, the Mehmúd Bahmini, ruler of, 46; Sultán Mehmúd Khilji ravages, 50; again invaded and laid waste by Sultán Mehmúd Khilji, 51; the nobles of, in revolt 73; Bahádúr Gílání takes possession of some districts of, 73; nobles of, defeat Imád-ul-Mulk of Kawel (A. D. 1528), 160; Sultán Bahádúr orders an army for expedition against (A. D. 1529), 162.
- Dakhinís, the, who accompany Sultán Bahádúr to Gujarát, 162; at the taking of Ráisen, 175; at the siege of Chittaur, 179; under the command of Hasan Khán Dakhani, 239.

Dām 1/15th of a rupee, 802, note.

Dāngri, the village of, a dependency of Burhānpur, 211; the battle at, 211.

Daryā-Khān, a friend of Sultān Mehmūd Begdā's youth, 78; founded Daryāpur, 88; his great dome at Ahmedābād, 78.

Daryā Khān, the title of Yākub; favourite of Sultān Sikandar, 142; the title of Shams Khān, 152.

Daryā Khān agent of Sultān Mehmūd Khilji, 165; of Māndu, Bahādur Shāh gives Ujjain to, 171.

Daryā Khān overthrows Imād-ul-Mulk, 210, 211; brings Sultān Mehmūd III. over to his side, 210; leads army against Imād-ul-Mulk, 210; the whole administration into the hands of, 211; the administration of, 211, 212; his grants of land, 212; his generosity, 212; a man of pleasure, 212; fond of music, 212, 213; the list of the musicians of, 212; a list of his professors of dancing, 213; tries to understand the mind of his master, 213; but fails, 214; his opinion of the Sultān, 214; his order to Kādir Shāh, 216; the reply of Kādir Shāh to, 216, 217; his expedition against Kādir Shāh, 217; insults Sultān Mehmūd III., at an entertainment, 217, 218; treasure of, falls into the hands of Sultān Mehmūd III., 218; sets one of the grandsons of Ahmed Shāh on the throne of Gujarāt, 219; gives battle to Sultān Mehmūd III. near Dāhor (A. D. 1543), 219; defeats them, 220; encamps near Dholka, 220; the army deserts, 220, 221; enters Ahmedābād, 220; sends his treasure to Chāmpāner, 221; goes to Burhānpur, 221; his condition in the Dakhan, 220; corresponds with Alam Khān, 220; defeated by Sayad Mubārak, 226; goes to Sher Shāh Sūr, 226; goes to Sher Shāh of Delhi, 271; is given estates in Mālwa, 271; dies in Mālwa, 271.

Daryā Khān Habshi, at Ahmednagar, 276; ordered to expel Alam Khān, 276.

Daryāpur—a superb, north of Ahmedābād, founded by Daryā Khān, 88.

Dāūd Khān, Sultān, son of Sultān Ahmed, raised to the throne by the nobles (A. D. 1458-59), 40; is dethroned, having reigned twenty-seven days, 41; retires into seclusion and dies, 41.

Dāndwāna, Zafar Khān's campaign against, 6.

Daulatābād or Devgad, Sultān Bahādur defeats Nizām Shāh of the Dakhan at, 161.

Daulat Khān, son of Amir Khān, 323; joins the Jām, 323; goes to Junagadh, 325; dies, 325.

Daulat, Sayad, the servant of Kalyān Rāo of Cambay, 318; receives the title of Rustam Khān, 318; joins Sultān Muzaffar, 318.

Dāwar-ul-Mulk, one of the chief confederates of Imād-ul-Mulk (Khush-Kadam) in the assassination of Sultān Sikandar, goes over with Bahā-ul-Mulk to Sultān Bahādur, 152; an accomplice of Imād-ul-Mulk arrested and beheaded (A.D. 1525), 156.

Delhi, Sultān Firūz Shāh mounts the throne of (A.D. 1345), 4; Firūz Shāh makes over the throne of, to his son Muhammad Shāh, 4; Ghiās-ud-dīn, grandson of Firūz Shāh raised to the throne of, 4; Abu Bakr succeeds Ghiās-ud-dīn on the throne of, 5; the Sultānate of, falls into the hands of Sultān Muhammad, 5; Humāyūn Khān ascends the throne of, under the title of Sultān Alāuddīn (A.D. 1394), 6; Mehmūd Khān placed on the throne of, as Nāsir-ud-dīn Shāh, 6; disturbance in the Kingdom of, after the death of Sultān Muhammad, 6, 7; Ikbāl Khān as the ruler of, 7; besieged by Tātār Khān 7; taken by Amir Teimūr (Tamerlane), 7; Tātār Khān proposes to take, 7; Sultān Muhammad Shāh marches against, 8; Ikbāl Khān returns to, 9; Sultān Mehmūd returns to power, 9; Sultān Sikandar, the son of Bahmī Lodi, King of, 46; Bahādur Khān praised by the people of, 115; Tātār Khān marches on, 186; Tātār Khān the descendant of the Kings of, 186; Humāyūn as the King of, 186; capital of Humāyūn, 186; Sher Shāh Sūr, the Afghan King of, 236.

Deolah, Sultān Muzaffar II, encamps at, 100; the defile of, 96.

Deoli, Bahādur at, receives news of Is-hāk's flight to the Rann, 158.

Dei Rāo, Professor of dancing of Daryā Khān, 213.

Devgad or Daulatābād—Fort, Bahādur Khān at, 160.

Dhandhukā—its situation, 72; Tāj Khān at, 149, 150; Bahādur's camp at, 155; its situation, 218; as a part of Alam Khān's estates, 218; Sultān Mehmūd III. at, 219.

- Dhanej, Prince Latíf Khán at, 153.
- Dhanura (or Dhantra), a village under Sultánpur and Nazarbár, bestowed on Malik Hisám-ud-din, 77.
- Dhár, a very pretty dancing girl of Malik Gopi, 132 ; story concerning her and Ahmed Khán, 132.
- Dhár, Sultán Muzaffar I. invests the fort of, 9 ; Sultán Ahmed marches against, 15 ; Malik Sárang Kiwám-ul-Mulk is sent to protect, 96 ; a dependency of Málwá, 96 ; buildings of Sultán Ghiás-ud-din at, 96 ; shrines of Sheikhs Kamál and Sháh Abdulláh Changál near, 97 ; Sultán Muzaffar II. visits, 97 ; Sultán Bahádúr at, 170.
- Dharangám, the town of, given to Mubárák Sháh, 278.
- Dharaoli, Sultán Bahádúr at, 162.
- Dholka, Daryá Khán encamps near, 230 ; Sheikh Manjhú at, 266, 268 ; given to Sayad Hámid, 313 ; again to Wazír Khán, 313.
- Dhúlkote, Fateh Kote known by the name of, 287, note ; Fateh Khán takes refuge in, 287.
- Dibálpur, Sultán Bahádúr at, 166.
- Dilváráh, Sultán Muzaffar II., at, 97.
- Diláwaráh, Sultán Bahádúr at, 166.
- Diláwar Khán, son of Mukbil Khán appointed to wait upon Sultán Mahmud III., 209 ; strangled to death, 209.
- Dilkhush, palace at Ahmedábád, place of Imád-ul-Mulk's confinement, 154.
- Dísa, the army of Akbar at, 308.
- Dín—Mauláná Khizr imprisoned in, 44 ; Malik Ayáz, the governor of, 75 ; works of Malik Ayáz at, 84 ; attempt to deliver it into the hands of the Firangis, 157 ; Bahádúr at, 158 ; entrusted to Kiwám-ul-Mulk by Bahádúr, 158 ; given in charge of Kiwám-ul-Mulk, 158 ; Bahádúr Sháh at (A. D. 1527), 159 ; capture of Firangis at, 159 ; Sultán Bahádúr at, 177 ; Portuguese expedition repulsed, 177 ; Fort of, 184, Firangis build a fort at, 198.
- Dohad, Sultán Mahmúd of Málwá at, 24 ; on the frontier of Málwá, 66 ; Sultán Mahmúd Begda at, 66 ; Sultán Muzaffar II. repairs the fort of, 96 ; Kaisar Khán, governor of, 99 ; plundered by Báisingh, Rájá of Pál, 157 ; death of Sultán Mahmúd at, 168.
- Duldul, the Arab charger of Sayad Hámid, 308, note.
- Dún (Dáhanu or Damaun ?)—Sultán Mahmúd Begda at, 75.
- Dún (Damaun) ceded to the Portuguese by Changiz Khán, 286.
- Dúngarpúr, residence of the Rájá of Bágár, destroyed by Gujarát armies, 112 ; Sultán Muzaffar II. goes to, 115 ; Bahádúr Khán at, 150 ; Rájá of, visits Sultán Bahádúr ; Sultán Bahádúr passes some days in fishing in the lake of, and sends detachments to pillage the neighbouring Hindu territories, 159 ; Prathiraj, Rájá of, 164 ; I'timád Khán at, 299.
- Dungarsi, minister of Ráwal Patái, kills Sheikh Khán, son of Kabír, 67 ; his death, 67.
- Durgavati, wife of Silahdi and mother of Bhúpat ; her advice to her husband and burning in Juhar flames, 174, 175.

E

- Egypt, cannon brought to Gujarát by Rúmi Khán from, 177 ; the cannon at the siege of Chittaur, 177.
- Eliás, son of Malik Ayáz, 86.
- Erandol, the town given to Mubárák Sháh, 278.
- Eánsuf-Shámi, one of Sayad Hámed's officers, killed in the battle near Maroli, 308.
- Eánsuf-Sheikh, brother of the author of the Mir-at-i-Sikandari, slightly wounded in the attack by Mírza Ibráhim Husáin on Sayad Hámid near Fáiri, 307.

F

- Farid, Malik, son of Imád-ul-Mulk, story of, and Sultán Ahmed I., 16; distinguishes himself at the battle between Sultán Ahmed and Hoshang of Mála, 17.
- Farihtah, the History of, references to, 7, 11, 21, 24, 34, 52, 59 60, 65, 67, 162, 163, 164, 174, 911.
- Farrah, a Kandhár village, Sayad Muhammad Jaunpuri dies at, 91.
- Fateh Khán, son of Fírúz Sháh and father of Sultán Ghiás-ud-dín, 4.
- Fateh-Khán, surnamed Hoshang, a cousin of Sultán Muzaffar, 12; sent against the Idar rebels, 12.
- Fateh-Khán, son of Sultán Muhammad and Bibi Mughli, 36, 38; half brother of Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 36; born (A. D. 1455), 23; protected by Sháh Álam, in his early years, 36; miracles worked on and in behalf of, by Sháh Álam, 37, 38; raised to the throne by the nobles as Sultán Mehmúd (afterwards Begda), 41. (See Mehmúd Begda).
- Fateh-Khán, Governor of Pattan, 110.
- Fateh-Khán, an Afghán, of the Lodi tribe, admitted to an audience by Sultán Bahádur, 164.
- Fateh-Khán Balúch, places Sháhúji on the throne of Gujarát, 268; encamps at Rúbráh, 269; 'Itimád Khán bestows estates on, 270; defeated by Sher Khán and Músa-Khán Fauládis, 287.
- Fateh-Khán Budhú, ruler of Sindh, the Gujarát Sultán's cup-bearer and son-in-law of Sultán Muzaffar, does not join Imád-ul-Mulk, 145; his wife Ráje-Áyishah, 136.
- Fateh-Khán, Shirwání, Chief Officer of Amín Khán's army, 314; comes to Shaháb-ud-dín, 314; expedition against Júnágadh, 314; dies, 314.
- Fatehpur, Burhán-ul-Mulk escapes to, 44.
- Fattúji, surnamed Muháfiz Khán, his counsel to Daryá Khán, 210, 219; at the battle of Dáhor, 219; goes to Chámpáner with the treasure and women of Daryá Khán. 221; being defeated, takes shelter in the Mauliya-fort, 221; is imprisoned and sent to Surat, 221.
- Fauládi Patháns, in the service of Sayad Mubárak, 253.
- Firangis, the (Portuguese), create a disturbance in Bassein and Máhim, 75; defeated at the port of Chaul by Malik Ayáz, 75; destroy the fort of Diu built by Malik Ayáz, 84; their power in the Gujarát ports, 85; Is-hák, son of Malik Ayáz Governor of Sorath, reported by his brother Iliás to be about to make over the fort of Diu to, 157; a vessel of theirs captured at Diu by Kiwám-ul-Mulk (A. C. 1527) and the men taken prisoners, 159; they are converted to Islám, 159; they build a fort at Diu, 198; their treacherous assassination of Sultán Bahádur and his attendants. (A. C. 1536), 199.
- Firang-Khán, a Portuguese convert to Islám of the name of John de St. Jago, 193—and note.
- Fírúz-shád, Ghiás-ud-dín, grand-son of Sultán Fírúz Tughlak crowned at, 4.
- Fírúz, Bahmani, Sultán of the Dakhan, his campaign against Bijánagar with the help of Sultán Ahmed I., 21; died (A. D. 431).
- Fírúz, Jám of Thattah, comes to ask aid of Sultán Bahádur, 161.
- Fírúz-Khán, son of Sultán Islám Sháh, killed by Mamríz Khán, 255.
- Fírúz-Khán, Dandání, ruler of Nágor, dies (A. C. 1451), 33.
- Fírúz Sháh, Sultán, uncle's son of Muhammad Tughlak, fond of hunting 1; his hunting adventure, 2; ascends the throne of Dehli (A. C. 1345), 4; hands over the reins of Government to his son Muhammad Khán, 4; dies, 4.

G

- Gadái, Malik, sent to the relief of Nágor, 34.
- Gágráon, Sultán Bahádur orders Muhammad Sháh Asrí to march to and capture, 176; Saint Miyán Mitha enshrined in, 176; Sultán Bahádur at, 177.
- Gálnah, fort, Bahádur Khán at, 160.

- Ganeshráo, attendant of Sultán Bahádúr killed by the Firangis, 199-200.
- Gangádas, son of Trimbakdás, defeated and besieged in the fort of Chámpáner, 24; asks aid of Sultán Mehmúd of Mándu against Sultán Muhammad, 24; joins Mehmúd Khilji against Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 30.
- Gangu, sent by Medáni Báí to defend Mándu, 100; killed in the siege of Mándú (A. D. 1518), 101.
- Garásiás, with the Bána of Chittaur, 110; reduced by Sultán Mehmúd III., 239; worship the murderer of Sultán Mehmúd III., 239.
- Ghairat Khán, son of Sultán Hoshang, marches towards Sultánpur and Nazarbár and rebels, 15-16.
- Ghálíb Jang, name of one of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji's elephants, 30-31.
- Ghází-Khán, title of Muhammad Mákha or Bhákhá, son of Imád-ul-Mulk Asfri, 77; goes to Idar with reinforcements, 109; killed in battle near Ahmednagar, 109.
- Ghází-Khán, son of Ahmed-Khán, appointed to lead an army against Latíf Khán, 156; Sultán Bahádúr sends against Latíf Khán, 157; defeats Latíf Khán, 157.
- Ghaznavi-Sheikh, at the siege of Cambay, 312, 313.
- Gheirat Khán, the son of Sultán Hoshang, 15; in confederation against Sultán Ahmed, 15; flees to Málwa, 16; submits to Sultán Ahmed I., 16.
- Ghiáspur, Humáyún's camp at (1335 A. D.), 198; camp of Yádgár Násir Mirza, and Sultán Bahádúr at, 197.
- Ghiás-ud-dín, Sultán, son of Mehmúd Khilji, ruler of Málwa, 46, 55; Rájá of Chámpáner seeks his assistance against Mehmúd Begda, 66; excuses himself from contest with Mehmúd Begda, 66; turns away Alif Khán, son of Alá-ud-dín bin Suhráb, 75; his death (A. D. 1501), 75; his buildings at Dhár, 96; his luxuriousness proverbial, 104.
- Ghiás-ud-dín, Sultán, title given by Sultán Mehmúd to his eldest son, 106.
- Ghiás-ud-dín, Sayad, chief of the Sayads at Broach, in the time of Sultán Mehmúd III., 241.
- Ghiás-ud-dín, Sultán, King of Dehli, dies, 259.
- Ghiás-ud-dín, Taghlak, son of Fatch Khán, grandson of Sultán Firáz, placed on the throne of Dehli (A. D. 1389), 4; defeats Muhammad Sháh, 4; is murdered (A. D. 1389), 5.
- Ghoghá, Sultán Mehmúd Begda's action against the pirates at, 63; Sultán Bahádúr at, 158.
- Girnár, the description of the country of, 53; campaigns of Sultán Ahmed against, 14; Sultán Mehmúd Begda's expedition against, 52, 54, 54; its surrender, 56; the fort of, 56.
- Godhráh, the town of, Sultán Muzaffar II. encamps in, 95, 100; return of Sultán Muzaffar II to, 96.
- Gohel Rájputáni, see Lakshmi Báí.
- "Gold Giver," the title of Sultán Muhammad Sháh, 23.
- Gonah, a village near Tintah, near Batwá, granted in fief to Bahádúr Khán, 136.
- Gondal, given to Sultán Muzaffar III by Amín Khán, 321.
- Gonds, rise against Sultán Mehmúd Khilji and plunder him, 51.
- Gondwánah, Sultán Mehmúd Khilji in, 51; who kills the Rájá of, 15; Sultán Bahádúr at, to hunt elephants, 176.
- Gopi or Gobi, Malik, originally a Brahman, and one of the vazírs of Sultán Muzaffar II., intercedes for Bhím, Rájá of Idar, 96; the administration in the hands of, 131; supports Sultán Muzaffar II, 131.
- Gujarát, Tátar Khán placed on the throne of, by his father Zafar Khán with the title on Sultán Muhammad (A. D. 1403), 17; the kingdom of, bestowed by a saint on Muzaffar Khán and his descendants (the Tank Dynasty), 3; Sultáns of, not wine-makers and sellers, 4; Rásti Khán, viceroy of, 5; Zafar Khán sent to quell the rebellion in (A. D. 1391), 5; Adil Khán's invasion of, is repelled by Zafar Khán (A. D. 1394), 5; subdued by Zafar Khán (A. D. 1393), 6; Tátar Khán joins his father Zafar Khán in, 7; Sultán Mehmúd flees to, before Teimúr (A. D. 1398-99), 7; nobles of, invite Zafar Khán to assume insignia of royalty (A. D. 1407), 9; Zafar Khán called Sultán Muzaffar (A. D. 1407), 9; he dies (A. D. 1410), 10; and is succeeded by his grandson Sultán Ahmed I (A. D. 1410); Sultán Hoshang of Máliwá's attempts to seize the throne of (A. D. 1414-15), 13; first brought under Islám by Sultán Aláuddin, 14; Sultán Hoshang's attack (A. D. 1417), 15; remuneration of soldiery under Sultán Ahmed, 20; System of financial officers from Sultán Ahmed to Sultán Muzaffar III, 20-21; Sultán Ahmed dies (A. D. 1443), 21; Sultán Muhammad, son of Sultán Ahmed, ascends the throne of (A. D. 1443), 23; the invasion of, Sultán Mehmúd Khilji (A. D. 1451-52), 25-26-29-31-55; Sultán Muhammad of, is poisoned, and is succeeded by Sultán Kutbuddin (A. D. 1451), 26; apportionment of revenues in the time of Sultán Kutbuddin, 33; Kutbuddin dies (A. D. 1461); Uncle of Sultán Kutbuddin succeeds and reigns only seven days, 40; Sultán Mehmúd Begda comes to the throne of (A. D. 1459), 41; trees and plants found in, 47; prosperous condition of, under Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 45, 47, 69; the army of, under Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 47, 51; no rain in, 65, 116; Bahádur Giláni's piracies on the coast of, 73; Sultán Mehmúd Begda dies (A. D. 1511), 78; power of Firangis over, 84, 85; Sultán Muzaffar II, son of Sultán Mehmúd Begda, ascends the throne of (A. D. 1515), 91; rain brought by the Prayers of Sultán Muzaffar II., 116; his death (A. D. 1525), 177; full of gold in the time of Muzaffar II., 126; ease and comfort in, 126; Sultán, Mehmúd Khilji of Máliwa makes an expedition to conquer, 127; the revenue records of, 127; Sultán Sikandar, son of Muzaffar II, sits on the throne (A. D. 1525-6), 131; Martyrdom of the Sultáns of, from Sultán Sikandar to Muzaffar III, 143; Muzaffar is murdered, 143-144-147; the youngest son of Sultán Muzaffar II. placed on the throne as Mehmúd Sháh II, 144, 149; Bahádur Sháh, son of Sultán Muzaffar II, sits on the throne of (A. D. 1525), 151; the emperor Humáyún's invasion of 186, 196; expulsion of the Mughals from, by Bahádur Sháh, 198; Bahádur is murdered by the Firangis at Div (A. D. 1536), 200, 201; Muhammad Sháh Fárúki appointed his successor by Sultán Bahádur, 202; Mírzá Muhammad Zamán, grandson of the King of Kharásán lays claims to the Sultanate of, 203, 204; but dies in a few days, 205; Sultán Mehmúd III is called to the throne of (A. D. 1536), 208; state of, under the administration of Daryá Khán, Wazir of Sultán Mehmúd III, 211, 212; organization of the army of, by Sultán Mehmúd III, 239; Sultán Mehmúd III and his ministers murdered by Burhán (A. D. 1554), 249, 251; the conquest of, by Akbar (A. D. 1573), 308-311; Gújar Khán, in the battle against Sultán Muzaffar III, 324; sent against Júnágadh, 325.

Gúlar (Ficus-glomerata) grow in Gujarát, 47.

Gundi, Bahádur's camp at, 158.

Gwalior, Humáyún advances as far as, 183, 184, 186.

H

Habib, see P'tibár-ul-Mulk.

Habib Khán, son of Ahmed Sháh and uncle of Mehmúd Begda, plot to place him on the throne, 43.

Habib Khán, a Máliwa noble flees to Sultán Muzaffar II, from the oppression of Medáni Rái, 98.

Habib Khán, title of Malik Sáheb bin Mujáhid-ul-Mulk, 153.

Habib Khán, one of the nobles of Sultán Mehmúd opposes Sultán Bahádur and is defeated, 167.

Háfiz Muhammad, Sayad, a saint and descendant of Kutbi Álam, 240.

Háji Kálú, one of Sultán Mahmúd Begda's nobles, founds the village of Kálupúr, 89.

Háji Khán, at the siege of Pattan, 290; goes over to Fauladis, 291.

Háji Khán Afghán, one of the nobles of Islám Sháh, 279; comes to Gujarát, 279; defeats the Rána of Chittaur, 279; Kadi given to, 286.

Háji, Malik, receives the title of Azdul-Mulk, 44; supports Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 43, 44; is condemned to death by that Sultán, 52.

Háji Muhammad—see Shujáat Khán, 156.

Háji púr, Kiká, minister of Sher Khán encamps at with treasure, 304.

Halim, Ázám Khán, Malik, in battle near Kapadwanj, 31.

Hálol, a garden, made by a Gujaráti carpenter for Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 69.

- Halol, village three kos from Muhammadābād, Sultān Muzaffar II encamps at, 111; story of its origin, 69; Hālā, a carpenter, makes a garden for Sultān Mahmūd Begda, id.; burial place of Sultān Sikandar, ten kos from Chāmpāner, 144; Bahādur Khān at, 164, 187.
- Hāmīd, Sayad, grandson of Sayad Mubārak, 280; in battle against the nobles of Gujarāt, 289; son of Sayad Mirān, in battle against Changīz Khān, 293, 294; joins Akbar, 309; districts of Dholka, Khānpur, and Sami given to, 312; in the siege of Cambay, 313; taken to Agra by Akbar Shāh, 313.
- Hamīd-ud-dīn Nagari, Sheikh, a saint, Mulla Kabīr, the follower of, 79.
- Hamīd-ul-Mulk escorts Mīrza Ibrāhīm Khān into Ahmedābād, 92.
- Ham-Zabān, deputy of Mīrza Ibrāhīm at Surat, fights with Akbar, 311, submits to him, 311.
- Hans Bāi, step-mother of Sultān Mahmūd Begda, educated Khalīl Khān (Sultān Muzaffar II), 90, 119.
- Hanāmān, gate of Chittaur, 179.
- Harchand, father of Sahāran, 1.
- Harpāl, grandfather Sahāran, 1; great-grand father of Sahāran, 1.
- Harsol, Sultān Muzaffar II at, 111; Sultān Bahādur at, 151.
- Hasan Khān, Bahādur Shāh restores the district of Ashta to, 171.
- Hasan Khān Dakhni, goes over to the side of Sayad Mubārak, 263; sets Shābuji on the throne of Gujarāt, 268; encamps at Rudrah, 269; is killed in battle, 270; in command of Dakhni division of Mahmūd III's army, 239.
- Hasan Khān Mewātī, the ruler of the country of Mewāt, 115; offers help to Prince Bahādur Khān, 115.
- Hasbul-Mulk, the son of, joins rebellion against Sultān Ahmed I, 11.
- Hāshim, Sayad, the brother's son of Sayad Mubārak, killed in battle, 264.
- Hāshim, Sayad, son of Sayad Muhammad Bārha, killed in battle against Muzaffar, 320.
- Hātīm, an Arab Chief of Tai, renowned for his unequalled generosity, 156; (note 1).
- Hauzi-Khās, Zafar Khān encamps at, 5.
- Hanzī Kutub (Kān Kariah) built by Sultān Kutb-ud-dīn, 33.
- Henry Elliot's History of India, references to 42, 83, 197, 200, 208, 260, 310.
- Hindāl, Mīrza, Humāyūn's general defeats, Sultān Ālam Lodi, 176; defeats Tātār Khān, 186.
- Hindūs of Kumbhalmere plundered, 34; the foot of Kānūr in the hands of, 177; the laws of Islām on the, under Sultān Mahmūd III, 239; distinguishing dress under Mohamadan rule, 239.
- Hisām-ud-dīn Mughal, Malik, as ruler in Burhānpur, offers support to Ālam Khān but raises Ālam Khān, Khānzādah on the throne of Burhānpur, 76; is reconciled with Malik Lādan Khiljī, 77; receives the village of Dhanūra under Sultānpur, 77.
- Hisām-ul-Mulk, Bhandāri, joins Moid-ud-dīn in his rebellion against Sultān Ahmed I, 11.
- Hoahang, called Fateh Khān (q. v.) a cousin of Sultān Muzaffar, 12.
- Hoshang, Sultān of Mālwa, son of Dilāwar Khān, called also Alp Khān, 9; kept in confinement by Sultān Muzaffar, 9; his part in the rebellions against Sultān Ahmed, 13; withdraws from Gujarāt at discretion, 13; makes another attack upon Gujarāt, 16; Sultān Ahmed's punitive expedition against, 15, 16, 17; present at the battle near Ujjain, 16; makes peace with Sultān Ahmed at Dhār, 17; enters Māndu, while besieged, 18; sues for peace, 18; makes a night attack on Sultān Ahmed at Bērangpur, 18; is defeated (A. D. 1423-23), 18; fort of Mandesār built by, 113.
- Hujjat-ul-Mulk, as the police magistrate of Ahmedābād, 125; story of him and a thief, 125, 126; receives the title of Khān Jahān, 126; deprives all religious men of their lands, in the time of Sultān Muzaffar II, 126.
- Humāyūn, Emperor, Sultān Ālam Khān Lodi revolts against, 176; and is expelled from Kālpī by, 176; ceases of hostility between him and Sultān Bahādur, 181; commands Muhammad Zundār Mīrza, at Agra; his letter to Sultān Bahādur, 181, 182; the answer of Sultān Bahādur to the letter of, 182, 183, 184; advances off to Gwalior, 186;

- Táht Khán sent to make diversion against, 186; wins over Bámkhán and surrounds Sultán Bahádur at Chittaur, 188; march of, against Bahádur at Chittaur, 188; attacks and plunders Bahádur's camp with great slaughter (1534 A.D.), 188-90; besieges Mándu and Sultán Bahádur in it, 191; orders a general massacre at Mándu (1534 A. D.), 192; besieges Chámpaner, his treatment of Manjhu, Sultán Bahádur's musician, 192; captures Maulia, the citadel of Chámpaner (1534 A. D.), 194; captures the fort of Chámpaner (A.D. 1535), 195; pardons Ikhtíár Khán, 196; at Cambay and Ahmedábád, 196; visits the tomb of Hazrat Kutb-ul-Aktáb Sayad Burhánuddín, 196; returns to Agra, 197.
- Humayún Khán, the eldest son of Sultán Muhammad Tughlak, mounts the throne of Dehli under the title of Sultán Ala-ud-dín, dies in A. D. 1394.
- Humáyún Sháh Dakhni, Nisám Sháh, the son of, 50.
- Hán, a coin, 302, note.
- Hhrmus-ul-Mulk, Malik-ul-Hadyah, known as, 120.
- Hoshang, Sultán, the grave of, has the power of sweating, 187.
- Husein (Daryá Khán) styled Majlis-i-Girámi, 209; appointed as a minister to Sultán Mehmúd III., 209; the fate of, 210.
- Husein Bukhári, Sayad, a descendant of Kutbi Álam, 240; the occupant of the seat of the Saint at the shrine of Sayad Burhán-ud-dín Bukhári at Batwa, 265; his letter to Sayad Mubárák, 265; dissuades Násir-ul-Mulk from going against Sayad Mubárák, 266; sees Kutbi-Álam in the spiritual world, 266.
- Husein Khán, Shams Khán, so entitled, 152, 153.
- Husein, Malik, son of Ráwul Patáí, 67; entitled Nizám-ul-Mulk, 107; fief-holder of Ahmednagar drives Ráimál out of Ídar and establishes Bihárimál, 108; again appointed to Ídar, 107; the Wazir's dislike and intrigue against him, 107, 108; attacked in Ídar by the Ráná of Chittaur, 107; Husein Malik entitled Mubáriz-ul-Mulk, 108; retreats to Ahmednagar, 108; defeats the Ráná of Chittaur near Ahmednagar 109, 110; reported dead, 110; confers with Kiwám-ul-Mulk at Walád, 111; stays at the village of Rápál, 111; kills the Kántha-Kolis, 111; anecdote of him and the bard, 107.
- Husein Mírza, the ruler of Khurásán, 46; the contemporary of Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 46.
- Husein Mírza Bábakra, Sultán of Khurásán, 181; Muhammad Zamán Mírza, the grandson of, 180, 181.

I

- Ibni Afraz, the translator of the book "Shafá," 49; consults Sultán Mahmúd Begdá on the validity of a certain tradition, 49, 50.
- Ibní Batútah, his account of the meeting of Násir-ud-dín and Muizz-ud-dín, 260, note.
- Ibráhim, Sultán of Jaunpúr, his designs upon Dehli frustrated by Sultán Musaffar I., 9.
- Ibráhim Adham, a rich man of Balkh, afterwards becomes a famous Saint, 81 (footnote).
- Ibráhim Husein Mírzá, grandson of Sultán Husein Bábakara of Khurásán, comes to Changiz Khán, 293; called by I'timád Khán, 303; harasses Sher Khán's army, 304; robs Kíka of the treasure of Sher Khán, 304, 305; story of him and Sayad Hámid, 305, 306, 307; at Broach, 309; kills Rustam Khán, 310; flees from Gujarát 310; goes to Hindustán, 311.
- Ibráhimis, a gold currency, 302, note.
- Ibráhim Khán, is slain in the battle of Ahmednagar, 109; son of Sultán Musaffar II, and a slave-girl, 136; with Prince Bahádur Khán, his brother, 150; an Afghan officer of Sher Khán, falls fighting with Ibráhim Husein, 305.
- Ibráhim Khán Mírzá, envoy of the King of Khurásán and Irák to Sultán Musaffar II, of Gujarát, 92; his quarrel with Sultán Muhammad of Málwá, 93, 94.
- Ibráhim Lodi, Sultán, ascends the throne of Dehli, 100, 107; disaffection against, 115; Sultán of Dehli, nephew of Sultán Ala-ud-dín, 115; kills some great nobles, 115; fights with Sultán Ala-ud-dín, 115; Sultán Musaffar II goes to, 115; sends for Bahádur Khán, 115; his jealousy towards Bahádur Khán, 115; the discontentedness of the people of Jaunpúr with, 116; Emperor of Dehli, engagement of, with Bábar at Fámpat, 115, 150.

Ibrat Khán, 207.

Ídar, Zafar Khán suppresses a rebellion in (A. D. 1394), 6; Zafar Khán's campaign against (A. D. 1397-98) 7; Rámál Rájá of (A. D. 1412), 12; rebellion against Sultán Ahmed in, 12; Punjá, Rájá of (A. D. 1427), 19; Sultán Ahmed's campaign against, 21; Sultán Muhammad's expedition against (A. D. 1445), 23; Rájá of, gives his daughter to Sultán Muhammad Sháh in marriage, 23; Bhím, son of Bhán, Rájá of (A. D. 1512) 95; Sultán Muzaffar II.'s campaign against, 95, 96; Ráo Bhím, Rájá of, succeeded by Rámál and Bhármál (A. D. 1514), 97, 98; Nízám-ul-Mulk ordered to expel Rámál from, 98; Sultán Muzaffar II. at, for hunting, 106; Malik Husein, entitled Nízám Khán, appointed as the thanedar of (A. D. 1520), 107; invaded by the Rána of Chittaur, 107, 108, 109; the Rájá of, in the retinue of Sultán Bahádúr (A. D. 1529), 165; the Girásías of, reduced by Sultán Mehmúd III., 239.

Ídar-gate, one of the gates of Ahmedábád, 305.

Iftikhár-ul-Mulk, son of the ruler of Thálner, 15; the title of Malik Mubarak, 91.

Ikbal Khán (Malá), the ruler of Delhi, falls into the hands of, 7; takes the fort of Pánapat 7; Sultán Muhammad Sháh marches against, 8; invades Kanauj, 9; is killed, 9, besieges Sultán Mehmúd in Kanauj, 9; his brother Sárang Khán, commander of Multán, 7; is killed (A. D. 1405), 9.

Ikbal Khán, the title of Kutb-Shamáchi, 152; in charge of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji; (A. D. 1530-31), 167.

Ikhtiyár Khán, vazir of Sultán Bahádúr, arrives at Naálchah with a great army and treasure, 171; with Sultán Bahádúr, at the siege of Ráisen, 173; at the taking of Mandesár, 177; in the charge of Ohámpáner, 193, 194, 195; but surrenders it to Humáyún (A. D. 1535), 195; pardoned by Humáyún, 196; composes a poetical enigma on Humáyún's name, 196; composes a poetical chronogram of Sultán Bahádúr's death, 201; at Ahmedábád, 203; vazir of Sultán Bahádúr, 209; appointed to wait upon Sultán Mehmúd III., 209; strangled to death (A. D. 1587), 209; his character, 209, 210; his death, 210.

Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, sets Sháhújí on the throne of Gujarát, 268; encamps at Rubrah, 269; being defeated in battle flees, 270; ordered to expel Álam Khán, 276; at Ahmednagar, 276; three districts conferred on him, 285; submits to Akbar, 309; goes to the hills of Lúnáwara, 310; joins Muhammad Husein, 313; dies (A. D. 1574), 313.

Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, a noble of Muzaffar II., commissioned to report on Dilárwarah, 97.

Ilm-ud-dín Sayad, son of Ahmed Bukhári, grandson of Sháh Álam, servant of Sikandar, 143.

Ilyás, son of Malik Ayáz, waits upon Sultán Bahádúr at Cambay and reports the defection of his brother Is-hák, governor of Sorath, 157.

Imád-ul-Mulk, title of Malik Kálá, 45.

Imád-ul-Mulk, Ásas, takes the forts of Thálner and Dharmál, 75; one of the nobles of Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, 88; populated Ásaspur (Isanpur), 88.

Imád-ul-Mulk, sent by Sultán Muzaffar II., to assist Mubáriz-ul-Mulk, 111.

Imád-ul-Mulk, the title of Áká Arslán, 238.

Imád-ul-Mulk, Khush-Kadam; suspicions of, against Sikandar and his conspiracy; 142; assassinates Sultán Sikandar, 142, 143; kills Pír Muhammad Malik, 144; places Násir Khán on the throne, 144; names him Mehmúd Sháh, 144; poses as the guardian of Mehmúd Sháh, 144; an account of his faithlessness and heartlessness in connection with Sultán Sikandar, son of Sultán Muzaffar, 145; his hopes when Sikandar came to the throne and his subsequent disappointment, 145; his jealous efforts to cause disagreement between Sultán Sikandar and Khudáwánd Khán, his conspiracy, 146; grants a title without the Sultán's sanction to the Magistrate of Ahmedábád and the Sultán's displeasure, 146; murderer of Sultán Sikandar, 149; guardian of Sultán Mehmúd makes himself unpopular amongst soldiers and nobles, 149; his correspondence with Imád-ul-Mulk of Eliehpur, 149; correspondence of, with Rána Sānghá, petition to the emperor Bábar for help, assembles Zamíndárs, threatens the Sultánpur and Nazarbár frontiers, 149; sends Azd-ul-Mulk with horses and elephants to Moráa to prevent any one meeting Bahádúr Khán, 151; steps taken by, to drive Bahádúr Khán, and the treachery of the nobles, 152; lavishly distributes gold to his nobles, 153; invites Prince Latíf Khán to join him, 153; severs his connection with Násir Khán, whom he had set up as Sultán Mehmúd, 153; sends Azd-ul-Mulk to Rároda, 153; sends Mubáriz Khán Bakkál to the outpost of Dhánej to prevent Bahádúr Khán, 153; sends for Prince Latif Khán, 153; confusion of, 153; severs his connection with Prince Nasir Khán, 153; surrounded by Tá Khán, 154; conceals himself in a neighbour's house, 154; prisoner before Bahádur Khán and ordered to be kept in confinement, 154; taken prisoner on Sultán Bahádur's arrival at Chikampner and his house plundered, 154; ordered to be crucified and his accomplices, Self-ud-din and Ali to be torn to pieces, 155; crucified, 155.

Imád-ul-Mulk, title of Malik Jiwan bin Tawakkul, 209; his death, 210; goes against the son of Silahdi at Bahádur Sháh's order, 171; sent to Mandesar by Bahádur, 177; General of Bahádur, 198; sent against Mirsa-Muhammad Zamán, 203; returns to Ahmedábád victorious, 204; orders the death of Ikhtiyár Khán, Mukbil-Khán, and Lád-Khán, 209; Daryá Khán plots his overthrow, 210; retires to Jhámwár, 210; gives battle near Patri to Daryá Khán, 210; overthrown by Daryá Khán, 210, 211; goes to Mubárak Sháh, 211; seeks shelter with Kádír Sháh, 211, 216; is recalled from Mándu by Sultán Mehmúd III., 222; made fier-holder of Broach and the port of Surat, by the Sultán, 222; at Broach, 231; intercedes for the rebels Daryá Khán and Alam Khán, 232, 233; is sent for by the Sultán, 233; his camp plundered, 235; taken to Surat and there killed by Khudáwand Khán, 236.

Imád-ud-Mulk, son of Ikhtiyár-ul-Mulk, in the attack on Sayad Hámíd, 206.

Imád-ul-Mulk, of Berar, or Káwel, expelled by the Dakhan confederacy from his kingdom, Sultán Bahádur goes to help him, 160; meets the Gujarát Sultán at Nasarbar, 160; a fort in Birar, defeat of, 160; applies to Sultán Bahádur for help, 160; besieged in the fort of Banhari or Bathri (A. D. 1528), 160; Bahádur Khán makes peace of, with Nizam-ul-Mulk, 161; joins Sultán Bahádur on his way to Dakhan, 162; peace of, with Barid; marriage of the daughter of, with Imád-ul-Mulk, begs Bahádur to forgive Barid, 163.

Imád-ul-Mulk of Elichpur, correspondence of Imád-ul-Mulk of Gujarát, 149.

Imád-ul-Mulk Rámí, kept up an army of the Turks, 254; goes over to the side of Sayad Mubárak, 266; his share of the Kingdom of Gujarát, 270; refuses to give a portion of his estates to Alam Khán, 271; plots the ruin of Sayad Mubárak, 273; but saves him, 274, 275; defeats Alam Khán, 276; quarrels with I'timád Khán, 277; instigates the death of Tughluk Khán, 277; is reconciled with I'timád Khán, 278; overthrows Sayad Mubárak, 279, 280; promises estates to Sayad Mirán, 284; but deprives him of the estates given by I'timád Khán, 285; quarrels with I'timád Khán, 285; goes to Broach, 286; goes against Khudáwand Khán, 286; is treacherously murdered by him (A. D. 1559), 286.

Isá Malik, supports Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, 43; receives the title of Nizam-ul-Mulk, 45.

Isá Sálar conspires against Sultán Ahmed (A. D. 1414-1415), 13.

Is-hák, son of Malik Ayáz, 86; entitled Changís Khán, 86; succeeds to his father's mansab, 114; rebels and advances to capture Diu and make it over to the Firangis, 157; at Nawánagar and occupies the Fort of Diu, 157; flies in the face of Sultán Bahádur's advance, 158; gives battle to, and defeats Tughlak Khán, governor of Morbi, 158; flight of, to the Rann, 158.

Islám, first introduced by Sultán Alá-ud-din in Gujarát, 14; supported and spread by Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, 46; revived in Sindh, 60; laws of, under Sultán Mehmúd III, 239.

Islám Sháh, the King of Dehli dies (A. D. 1554), 251.

Isamí Sháh, King of Irák and Khurásán, sends envoy to Muzaffar II. of Gujarát, 92; list of presents from Muzaffar II, 94.

I'tibár-ul-Mulk, Habib styled as, 291; is killed by I'timád Khán, 291.

I'timád Khán, Sultán Bahádur sends against the Rámí's son, 178; the title of Abdul Karím Khán, 237; appointed regent of Sultán Ahmed II, 256; goes over to the side of the rebels, 269; brings Patch Khán back to his side, 270; the list of the districts as the share of, 270; his dislike of Alam Khán Lodi, 271; arranges some estates for Alam Khán with reluctance, 271, 272; marches against Anís-Khán Habshi, 272; defeats him at Viramgam, 272; conspiracy against him, 272, 273; in plot for the ruin of Sayad Mubárak, 273; but saves him, 274, 275; defeats Alam Khán, 276; displeased with the Sultán, 277; quarrels with Imád-ul-Mulk, 277; goes to Mubárak Sháh, 277; invades Gujarát, 277; reconciles with Imád-ul-Mulk, 278; resumes his office, 278; overthrows Sayad Mubárak, 279, 280; confers five districts on Sayad Mirán, 285; quarrels with Imád-ul-Mulk, 285; sends for all his agents, 286; orders Imád-ul-Mulk to go to his estates, 286; goes against Changís Khán, 287; intrigues to depose the Sultán, 288; kills him (A. D. 1560), 289; seats Sultán Muzaffar on the throne (A. D. 1560), 289; plot by the nobles against, 289, 290; besieges Pattan, 290; but is defeated, 300; promotes Habib, 301; is defeated at Jhotana (A. D. 1582), 302; his third expedition against Fouláda, 322; being defeated by Chengiz Khan, flees to Ahmedabad, 303; flees to Morast with the Sultan, 305; invited by the Habashis, 301; restored to his former position, 301; retires from the public life, 302; sends for the two Miras, 303; invites Akbar to conquer Gujarát, 304; submits to Akbar, 305; and placed in confinement by him, 310; made viceroy of Gujarát, 315; brings Shahab-ud-din back from his return to Dehli, 316; defeated by the Mughals, 317.

I'as-ul-Mulk, 177.

J

Ja'far Bukhari, Sayad, elder brother of Nawab Azud-ud-daulah Sheikh Muhammad Bukhari, sent against Sher Khan, 311; killed in battle near Pattan, 311.

Ja'far Khan, son of Imad-ul-Mulk, meets Sultan Bahadur at Baroda, 160; submits a petition on his father's behalf stating Nizam-ul-Mulk acts against the promise, 162.

Jagat, conquest of, by Sultan Mehmud Begda (A. D. 1475), 60, 62, 63; marvel of the country of, 61, 62; Malik Toghá has charge of, 63; a place of Hinda worship, 326; Sultan Muzaffar III at, 326.

Jajari, the emissary of the Raja of Jeypur, brings tribute from his Raja to Sultan Bahadur (A. D. 1529), 164; accompanies Sultan Bahadur into Malwa, 165.

Jajinagar, Sultan Hoshang goes to hunt elephants at, 18.

Jalal Khan, son of Sultan Muhammad, placed on the throne as Sultan Kutb-ud-din, 26.

Jalal Khan Khokhar, ruler of Nagor, deprived of his governorship, 8.

Jalal Munawwar-ul-Mulk, Sayad, Bukhari, story related by, 121, 122; Persian historian, 122; the story of the bath servant and Sultan Muzaffar II related by, 124, 125; eye witness of the siege of Mandu, 102; his story, 102; saved by Sayad Ahmed, 319; killed, 319.

Jalal, Sayad, see Sheikji, Shah.

Jam, goes with Sultan Muzaffar against the army of the viceroy, 323; goes to Janagadh, 325; makes peace with the viceroy, 326.

Jamah, Sikandar Shahi, gown introduced by Sultan Sikandar, 147.

Jamalpúr, gate of Ahmedabad, 90; Taj Khan Salár's mosque near, 90.

Jamal-ud-din, Malik, Silahdar or armour-bearer of Sultan Mehmud Begda, 59; appointed faujdar of Ahmedabad, 59; with the title of Muhafiz Khan, 59.

Jama mosque, near Manek Chank, Ahmedabad, built (A. D. 1414), 11.

Jambus (Eugenia-jambolana), grow in Gujarát, 47.

Jambwa, a village under Jhalawar, the situation of, 219; Sultan Mehmud III at, 219.

Jam Firuz, of Thatthah in Sindh comes to ask help of Sultan Bahadur, 162; king of Sindh receives an entertainment and promise from Bahadur Khan, 162.

Jami, Maulana, one of the most brilliant men of letters of his day, 46; the contemporary of Sultan Mehmud Begda, 46.

Jam Juna, the king of Thatthah in Sindh, the father of Bibi Mirghi and Bibi Mughli 38.

Jasa, the minister of the Jam, 314; sent against Mirza Khan, 314; in the battle against Khan-i-Azam, 324; slain, 324.

Jasdan, Sultan Bahadur at, 158.

Jaunpur, Bahadur Khan at, 116; secret message to Bahadur Khan of the people of, 116.

Jetalpur, Miran Muhammad Shah encamps at, 298; the situation of, 298.

Jeypur, Ratansi, the Raja of, sends his tribute to Sultan Bahadur (A. D. 1529), 164.

Jeysingh, the son of Gangadas, Raja of Champaner foments sedition, 59; prevented from rebellion, 59.

Jhalawar, Satarsal, Raja of (A. D. 1414-15), 13, 15; Mansingh, Raja of (A. D. 1580-31), 168; extent of the territories of, 168; as an estate of Imad-ul-Mulk, 210; Imad-ul-Mulk retires to, 210; the village of Jambwa under, 219.

Jhotana, battle of, 292; situation of, 292.

Jhujhár Khán, Bahyal given to, 285; defeated by Changíz Khán, 287; murders Changíz Khán, 301; gets possession of Ahmedábád, 301; invites I'timád Khán, 301; submits to Akbar, 309; imprisoned by him, 309; killed, 310.

Jítpur, founded by Zafar Khán, 6.

Jivan bin Tawakkul, Malik (Imád-ul-Mulk), appointed as a minister to Sultán Mehmúd III, 209; the fate of, 210.

Jivandás, joins rebellion against Sultán Ahmed I, 11.

Jivgám, the Gujarát army halts at, 276.

Jiwa, Sháh, son of Sheikhan Saláhdar, fight with Mán Singh, Rájá of Jháláwár, and death of (A. D. 1530-31), 168.

John de St. Jago, a Portuguese apostate, 193 note; converted to Islám with the name of Firangi Khán, 193 note.

Jukár, ceremony of cremating the women alive, 174.

Júnágadh, fort near Gírnár, 14; captured by Sultán Ahmed (A. D. 1415), 14; taken by Sultán Mehmúd Begdá (A. D. 1472), 42, 45, 56, 57, 58; Sultán Mehmúd Begdá's expedition against, 52, 53; the antiquity of, 53; description of the fort of, 53; taken by Sultán Muhammad Tughlak of Dehli, 54; besieged by Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, 54, 55 the Sultán strengthens the fort of, 58; fort in charge of Prince Khalil Khán (A. D. 1486-87), 72; entrusted to Mujáhid Khán, Bhikání, 158; Fateh Khán besieges the fort of, 314.

K

Káblí, a Kokani servant of Saint Sheikhji, Bahádur Khán makes a fool of, 138.

Kabír, Sayad, agent of Tátár Khán, 291; fights with the Habsahis, 292; killed in battle 325.

Kabír Muhammad, a servant of Álam Khán, 229; the prophecy of, 229, 230; dies, 230.

Kabír, Mulla, a follower of a great saint Sheikh Hamíd-ud-dín Nágori, his influence on Malik Muhammad Ikhtíár, 79, 80, 81, 82.

Kabír-ul-dín Sultáni, surnamed Burhán-ul-Mulk, conspires against Malik Shábán and Sultán Mahmúd Begdá, 42; his fate, 44.

Kabír-ul-Mulk, the police officer and magistrate, commissioned to search Imád-ul-Mulk 154.

Kábul, Álam Khán takes refuge with Bábar at, 277.

Kádi, as the estate of I'timád Khán, 270, 276; seized by Sher Khán and Álam Khán, 276.

*Kádír Sháh, title of Mallú Khán, the ruler of Mándu, 211; gives shelter to Imád-ul-Mulk, 211, see Mallú Khán.

Kalsar Khán, sent to Dohad by Muzaffar II to prepare for campaign in Málwa, 93; created governor of Fohad, 93; receives Sultán Mehmúd Khiljí at Bhankorah, 99; present at Ahmednagar with reinforcements against the Rána of Chittaur, 111, appointed successor of Shirzah Khán to take the field at the head of a large army 142; police officer at Ahmedábád, 154; arrested and beheaded (A.D. 1525), 156.

Kaisar Khán, Bahádur Khán sends, in pursuit of Nizám-ul-Mulk, Khájah Jahán, and Khudáwand Khán, 163.

Káliáwah, river, Muhammad Sháh encamps on the banks of, 198.

Kálpi, Álam Khán Lodi, the ruler of, 176.

Kálú, Malik, supports Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, 43, 44; receives the title of Imád-ul-Mulk, 45; causing the death of the innocent, 52; is condemned to death by Sultán Mehmúd Begdá (A. D. 1466), 52.

Kálu Malik, sister's son of Alif Khán, Sultán Bahádur makes chief of Mándu country, 168.

Kálúpúr at Ahmedábád, populated by Hájí Kálú, 89.

Kamál Sheikh, his tomb at Alimpúr, 24; his avarice, 25; intrigues with Mahmúd Khiljí for the kingdom of Gujarát, 25; Sayad Burhán-ud-dín tries to win him over from Mahmúd Khiljí, 27, 28; his death (A. D. 1451), 29.

Kamál-ud-dín, Sheikh, follower of Sayad Ali Hamdán, a Sayad of Surat, 141.

Kamál-ud-dín Asláf, Sháh, a man of high intellectual attainments in the court of the Gujarát Sultán, 168.

- Kamand, the situation of, 264; Násir-ul-Mulk encamps with Sultán Ahmed II. at, 264.
- Kambhoi, a village of Pattan, battle at, 5.
- Kambo, Sheikh Jamál, Poet, 195.
- Kámil-ul-Mulk, the minister of Mubárák Sháh, 261.
- Kannákur, Ráni, the favourite wife of Sultán Mehmúd Khílji, 99.
- Kandarpal, great grandfather of Saháran, 1.
- Kandhár, Sayad Muhammad Jaunpuri flees to, 91.
- Kánbhúráo, professor of dancing of Daryá Khán, 213.
- Kanji, a village, ten kos from Ahmedábád, near Mehmúdábád, granted as Jágr to Bahádur Khán, 136; Sultán Bahádur encamps at, 197; the situation of, 275; I'timád Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk make friendship with Sayad Mubárák at, 275.
- Kánkarya Tank in Ahmedábád, Khemdhrol palace near, 111; built by Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 33.
- Kannauj, Sultán Mehmúd takes possession of (A. D. 1398-99), 7, 9; Ikbál Khán besieges (A. D. 1404), 9; Sultán Ibráhím of Jaunpur visits, 9.
- Kánpár near Kálpí, battle between Sultán Álam and Mirza Hindál, 176.
- Kántha Kolis, killed by Mubáriz-ul-Mulk, 111.
- Kánúr, fort of, captured by Sultán Bahádur, 177.
- Kapadwanj, chief town in Kaira district, 30; battle between Sultán Kutbuddín and Mehmúd Khílji near, 30, 31; Sultán Mehmúd Begda goes to hunt to (A. D. 1460), 50; Sultán Bahádur encamps at, 159; Sayad Mubárák and I'timád Khán at, 264.
- Káreth, the fort of, founded by Alp Khán Sanjar (A. D. 1304), 18; repaired by Sultán Ahmed and named Sultánábád, 17; also called Meimún, Alif Khán flees to, 75; its situation, 75.
- Karji Ghát, in the east of the town of Bánawára, Sultán Bahádur at, 164, 165.
- Karwan, in possession of Hemkaran, 106; Sultán Mehmúd Khílji marches on (A. D. 1520), 106.
- Kásim Ali Sadr, Mauláná, envoy from Emperor Humáyún to Sultán Bahádur, 181.
- Kásim Beg, Humáyún's General at Broach, 197.
- Kásim Khusrao, Malik, joins rebellion against Sultán Ahmed I, 11.
- Kásim Mirán Sayad, in the battle with Naurang Khán, 324; sent against Júnágadh, 325.
- Kásim, Sheik, Sultán Muzaffar seeks the prayers of, for success in the attack on Kumbh Kut, 10.
- Katchb, home of Jádejás, 60, note; the description of the Rann of, 59, 60, 156; Ishák escapes to the Rann of, 158; Ráo Bharmal I of (A. D. 1585-1631), 327; Bhuj, the capital of, 327.
- Katlak Khán, the title of Násir-ul-Mulk, 152.
- Káwel, a fort in Birár, 160.
- Kazilbáshes, embassy of, to Gujarát 94; killed and robbed, 94.
- Khemdhrol palace near Kánkarya Tank in Ahmedábád, 111; the shrine of Sultán Muzaffar II's mother near, 114; Sultán Muzaffar II at, 116; Sultán Bahádur at, 153; palace of, 153.
- Khalíl Khán, has charge of Sorath and Júnágadh, 72; accompanies his father to Nazarbád, 76; returns to Baroda, 77; his sons, 77; his father's dying advice, 78; son of Sultán Mehmúd Begda and Ráni Hirá-bái, born (A. D. 1475), 89, 90; succeeds his father (A. D. 1511) under the title of Sultán Muzaffar II. (q. v.), 89, 91; brought up by Hans-Bái, widow of Sultán Muhammad, 90; learns the Kurán by heart for his father's benefit, 118; kingdom of Gujarát promised to, 118; his succession disputed, 131.
- Khán Aázam, Sultán Bahádur sends, against Wághar, 164.
- Khán Khánán, Sultán Bahádur sends, to pursue Ishák, 158; sent by Sultán Bahádur against Mánsingh, 168.
- Khándes Kings, the descendants of Umar Ibnul Khatláb, 257, note.
- Khán Harman, one of the best musicians of Daryá Khán, 213.
- Khán-i-Aázam Mahmúd Khán ordered to chastise the Sorath rebels, 16.

- Khān-i-Aāzam, Mīrza Asis Kokaltāsh known as, 311; Ahmedābād and Petlād given as estates to, 312; Nawwāb, made Viceroy of Gujarāt, 322; expedition of, against the Jām, 323; defeats Sultān Muzaffar III. and the Jām, 323; at Nawā-Nagar, 325; his pilgrimage to Makkah, 325; laid siege to Jūnagadh, 325, 326; again besieges and takes Jūnagadh, 328; makes peace with the Jām, 328; goes against Morbi, 327; goes against Rāo Bhārmal, 327; Sultān Muzaffar made over to, 327.
- Khān Jahān, in the battle near Kapadwanj, 31.
- Khān Jahān, the title given to Rāo Mandlik, 59.
- Khān Jahān, the title given to Hujjat-ul-Mulk by Sultān Bahādūr, 125.
- Khānji, Khudāwand Khān so called, 145.
- Khān Khānān, title of Khurram Khān, 152; ordered in pursuit of Is-hāk from Jūnagadh 158.
- Khān Khānān, the title conferred on Mīrza Khān, 321.
- Khānpur on the river Mahi, Sultān Kutbuddīn encamps at, against Mehmūd Khilji, 27 30; the ford of, 153; Sultān Bahādūr at, 164.
- Khānpur Gate, one of the gates of Ahmedābād, 317.
- Khān Sarovar, Ahmed Khān takes counsel near the reservoir of at Pattan (A. D. 1410), 10.
- Khāri, River, Sultān Mehmūd Begdā encamps near (A. D. 1461), 50; Gujarāt nobles and their armies camp at, 274.
- Kharkhi Ghāt, or Karji Ghāt, Gujarāt armies pass through, 112, 113.
- Khatrī, Malik Shāh, father of, joins rebellion against Sultān Ahmed I., 11.
- Kherad, Muhammad Shāh Asiri and Sultān Bahādūr at, 173.
- Kheri or Khiri, the village of, 314; Sultān Muzaffar III. at, 314.
- Khirsā (mimosops India) grow in Gujarāt, 47.
- Khizr-Khān defeats Ikbāl Khān (A. D. 1405), 9.
- Khizr-Khān sent to Idar with reinforcements, 109.
- Khizr, Manlānā entitled Seif-ul-Mulk, conspires against Malik Shaābān and Sultān Mehmūd Begdā, 42; is pardoned, 44.
- Khōbān, Malik, the equerry of Sultān Ahmed, 18.
- Khudāwand Khān present at the siege of Māndu, 100; the Vazīr of Sultān Muzaffar II., 116; Vazīr of Sultān Muzaffar and Sultān Sikander, does not join Imād-ul-Mulk, 145; the Chief Vazīr of Sultān Sikander, called also Khānji, 145; confirmed as Vazīr by Sultān Sikander, 146; receives honours from Bahādūr Khān, 154; Vazīr Bahādūr admits, to his presence, 154; Sultān Bahādūr sends, against Wāghar, 164; Bahādūr's General at Chittaur (1532 A. D.), 178.
- Khudāwand Khān kills Imād-ul-Mulk, 236; brother of Asaf Khān, 237; is made minister by Sultān Mehmūd III., 237; his tyranny at Surat, 286; Imād-ul-Mulk goes against, 286; treacherously kills Imād-ul-Mulk (A. D. 1559), 286; besieged by Changiz Khān, 286.
- Khudāwand Khān Ālīm, populated Ālīmpūr, 87; builds a mosque there, 24, 87; story of him and Fateh-Khān, 46; advice for the siege of Jūnagadh, 53; conspires to raise Ahmed Khān to the throne of Mahmūd Begdā, 65; severely punished by the Sultān, 65; his characteristics valued by Sultān Mehmūd Begdā, 87.
- Khudāwand Khān Bothri comes to Bahādūr Khān with kingly gifts, 161.
- Khudāwand Khān Rūmi, the wife's brother of Imād-ul-Mulk, 270; the port of Sūrat given to, 270.
- Khurāsān, the merchants of, trading in Gujarāt, 169.
- Khurāsān Khān escorts Mīrza Ibrāhīm Khān into Ahmedābād, 92; sent again with Ibrāhīm Khān, 94.
- Khurram Khān, the favourite attendant of Sultān Muzaffar II., 116.
- Khurram Khān comes from Muhammadābād to see Bahādūr Khān, 151; his son given the title of Nizām Khān, 152.
- Khurram Khān bin Sikander Khān, is given the title of Khān Khānān, 162.

- Khush Kadam, entitled Mukhlis Khán, 91; Sikandar's foster-brother, 141.
- Khusráo Khájah Amír, with Sultán Muizz-ud-dín, 267; his account of the meeting of Muizz-ud-dín and Násir-ud-dín, 280.
- Khwájah Jahán (Khwájah Mehmúd Gáwán) put to death by Sultán Muhammad Lashkar, 73.
- Khwájah Jahán, a eunuch of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji, dethrones Sultán Mehmúd of Málwá in favour of his younger brother Muhammad, 92; killed in battle, 94, 95.
- Khwájah Jahán, his city Parinda destroyed by Malik Amín (A. D. 1529), 163.
- Khwájah Muhammad, Hisám-ul-Mulk conspires against Malik ShaAbán and Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 42, 43.
- Kíka, a Banya, minister of Sher Khán, entitled Muwáfir-ul-Mulk, 304; is robbed of the treasure of Sher Khán by Ibráhím Husein, 304, 305.
- Kilich Khán, comes to assist Khán Khánán from Málwá, 320, 321; sent against Broach, 321.
- Kilij Muhammad Khán, left by Akbar as his deputy at Súrat, 311.
- Kirán-us-Saádain, the poem written by Khájah (Amir) Khusráo, 260, note.
- Kiwám-ul-Mulk, Sárang, title of Sayad Atá-ulláh (q. v.), 25; story of him and Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 48; also Malik Sárang known (q. v.) as, 59; given the Thánedari of Nárkha, 59; sent against Bahádúr Gílání at Dábhul, 74; his origin, 88; sent against the Ráúá of Chittaur, 101; Ahmedábád in charge of, 108; at Málád in support of Mubáriz-ul-Mulk, 111; at Ahmednagar with the Gujarát army, 111; joins the Sultán with his army at Harsole, 111; strength of his army, 112; on bad terms with Malik Ayáz at Mandisúr, 113; Sultán Muzaffar II. entertains a bad opinion of, 122; Sultán Mehmúd's entire confidence in, 122; as water-keeper of Sultán Muzaffar II., 122; intrigues against Nízám-ul-Mulk, 131; his administration in the hands of, 131; supports Sultán Muzaffar II., 131; officer of Sultán Bahádúr, 158; Dív. in charge of, 158; captures the Portuguese, 159; imprisons Firangi Ships and people at Dív., 159.
- Kolis, rebellion of, at Asáwal (A. D. 1410), 10; attack Sharzah Khán and his army (A. D. 1525-6), 142; the attempt of, to rescue Sultán Mehmúd (1530-31 A. D.), 168; betray the fort of Chámpáner to the Emperor Humáyún (A. D. 1535), 194; branded on the arm under Sultán Mehmúd III.
- Kombhalmer, battle near (A. D. 1456), 34; besieged by Sultán Kutbuddín, 34; who plunders the vicinity of (A. D. 1457), 35.
- Kót Pállád, the situation of, 220; Sultán Mehmúd III at, 220.
- Kothah, captured by Tátár Khán, a general of Sultán Bahádúr, 168.
- Krishna, a Rajpút of Kharál in Málwa, assists Sultán Mehmúd Khilji in his flight to Gujarát, 98.
- Krishna Devada, Rájá of Sirohi, seeks redress from Sultán Kutbuddín, 34;
- Kúchak, the famous charger of Sultán Bahádúr, 180.
- Kúmbha, Rána of Chittaur, son of Rána Mokal, reinstates Shams Khán in Nagar, 33; attacks Shams Khán in Nagar 34; Sultán Kutbuddín's expedition against, 34; defeated in the battle near Kombhalmer, 34; submits to Sultán Kutbuddín, 34; joint expedition of Sultán Kutbuddín, and Mahmúd Khilji against (A. D. 1457), 35; desperate battle near Chittaur (A. D. 1457), 35; being defeated submits to Sultán Kutbuddín, 35; again attacks Nágor, 35; Sultán Kutbuddín's third campaign against, 35.
- Kúmbha Gohel, given the title of Ráyán Ráo, 153.
- Kumbh Kot, Sultán Muzaffar's attack on (A. D. 1409), 10.
- Kuovar, ancestor of Saháran I.
- Kuovarpál, ancestor of Saháran I.
- Kuraishi Khán, agent of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji, 165.
- Kureish, the tribe from which the prophet was descended, 83; (footnote).
- Kutbi Alam, Sayad Barhánuddin known as, 120; the Shrine of, at Batwa, 134; appears in a dream to Sultán Muzaffar II and Sháh Sheikh, 134; reconciles them, 134, 135; tomb of, 141.

Kutb Khán of the Lodi tribe, flying from the Mughals, comes to Sultán Bahádúr (A. D. 1529), 164.

Kutb-Malik, entitled Asud-ul-Mulk, 91.

Kutb Shamaáchi, Malik given the title of Ikbál Khán, 162.

Kutbuddin Muhammad Khán, Nawwáb, defeats Sher Khán near Pattan, 311; district of Broach given to, 312; at the siege of Broach, 312-313; comes to Baroda, 318; defends it against the Sultán, 318, 319; but is treacherously killed, 319.

Kutbud-dín, Sultán, eldest son of Sultán Muhammad ascends the throne of Gujarát (A. D. 1451), 26; encamps at Khánpúr Báukáner on the river Mahi against Mahmúd Khilji, 27; is sped on his expedition by Sháh Álam, 30; battle with Mahmúd Khilji near Kapadwanj, 31; plunder of the Gujarát treasure, 31; defeats Sultán Mahmúd of Málwá, 32; offends Sháh Álam, 32; builds the Hauzi Kutb or Kánkariah, the Nagina Bágh, 33; opposes Sultán Mahmúd Khilji in Nagar, 33; assists Shams Khán of Nágór, 34; his expedition against Ráná Kumbhá, 34; sends a force against fort of Ábu, 34; treaty of peace with Sultán Mahmúd Khilji, 35; his joint expedition with Sultán Mahmúd Khilji against Ráná Kumbhá, 35; restores the fort of Ábu to Krishna Devadá, 35; starts another campaign against Ráná Kumbhá, 35; campaign against Sirohi and Ráná Kumbhá, 36; dies, 36; his dislike for Fateh Khán and conduct towards him, 36; his death caused by the sword which was given to him by Sháh Álam, 39; various accounts of his death, 40.

Kutb-ul-Mulk, escorts Mirza Ibráhím Khán into Ahmedábád, 92.

Kutb-Khán, son of Álam Khán Lodi, 271; is made a disciple of Sayad Mubárak, 271; killed in battle, 276.

L

Lád Khán, son of Mukbil Khán, 209; asks permission of Sultán Mehmúd III to kill Daryá Khán and Imád-ul-Mulk, 209; his fate, 209.

Ládan Khán, Malik, ruler of Burhánpúr pays his respects to Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 77; promoted to the title of Khán Jehán and granted the village of Ranás in Sef, 77; is reconciled with Hisám-ud-din, 77; nominated to assist Adil Khán II of Asir and Burhánpúr, 77.

Lakhsman-Sen, brother of Silahdi the Rájput, holds Báisen against Sultán Bahádúr, 172. Lakshmitái, widow of Sultán Muzaffar II and mother of Bahádúr Khán, a Gohel Rájputáni, 136.

Lakhota, a gateway of Chittaur, 179.

Langar Khán, son of Mallú Khán (afterwards Kádír Sháh of Málwa), 216; with Sultán Bahádúr, 216; sent in pursuit of Humayún's fugitive Mughal army, 216; killed at Diu with Sultán Bahádúr by the Portuguese, 216, 199, and 200.

Latíf Khán, prince, brother of Sultán Ahmed I., sent against Sheikh Malik, 13.

Latíf Khán, Son of Sultán Muzaffar II, 135; and Ráj-bái, 136; at Baroda, 77; sets out for Baroda, 117; takes shelter with Bhím, Rájá of Múnga, 141; solicits support of Táj Khán at Dhandúka, 150; at Dhánej, 153; sent for by Imád-ul-Mulk Khush-Kadam to be elevated to the throne in case of need, 153; joins him at Dhánej, 153; joined by the rebel nobles, 155; collects Hindu Chiefs and raises a rebellion against Bahádúr, 155; joined by Azdul-Mulk and Muháfiz Khán, 156; sacks the village of Sultánpúr and is defeated by Gházi Khán, 156; slain in battle with Gházi Khán, 157; his body first interred at the village of Marghdar, where he dies, but afterwards carried to and buried at Hálol, 157.

Latíf Khán, father of Sultán Mehmúd III, 208.

Latíf, Malik, invested with the title of Sharzah Khán by Sultán Sikandar, 141.

Latíf-ul-Mulk, Sondha, the bearer of the insignia of Sultán Muzaffar II., 123; story of him and Muzaffar Sháh, 124.

Latíf-ul-Mulk, his false report of the treachery of Daryá Khán against his friends, 214, 215; his punishment, 215.

Leilah and Majnún, the names of the destructive mortars of Sultán Bahádúr, the Romeo and Juliet of the East 189, (note); flourished in A.D. 661-680, 189.

Lodi, army of the tribe of, kept up by Sayad Mubárak, 254.

Loh-Lakkar (iron-wood) a relic at Ratwa, 196 (note)

- Lānī-wara, mountains of, 75; the Girāsīs of, reduced to subjection by Sultān Mehmūd II, 239.
 Lutfulāh, son of Malik-ul-Hadyah, 121.

M

- Ma-ālim-ut-tanzil, a commentary on the sacred Kurān, 116; Sultān Muzaḥḥar II used to read the, 116.
 Maāsumah-Begam, daughter of the emperor Bābar and wife of Muhammad Zamān Mīrza 181.
 Mādhpūr, a village in the Māngrole district, famous for Hindū superstition, 61, 62.
 Mahāillah (Mahābala) defile, storming of, by Sultān Mehmūd Begda, 54.
 Mahāim, Sultān Mehmūd Begda's expedition to, 75.
 Mahi, the river, Sultān Bahādūr crosses, 163; men of the Mughal army drowned in, 198.
 Mahipat, Rānā, a Rajpūt, Rājibāi, the wife of Sultān Muzaḥḥar II, the daughter of, 136.
 Māh, Sheikh, brings back I'timād Khān to Sayad Mulārak's side, 269.
 Māhsu, ancestor of Saharan, 1.
 Mābūr, the fort of, taken by Imād-ul-Mulk, 161.
 Majlis-i-Girāmi, Daryā Khān (q. v.) so entitled, 209.
 Majnān and Leila, mortars of Bahādūr Shāh, 189.
 Makhdūm-i-Jahāni (Saint) pleased with and blesses Zafar Khān, son of Wajihul-Mulk by bestowing the kingdom of Gujarāt, 3; the patron of the Sultāns of Gujarāt, 27.
 Makhdūm Jahāniān, Mīān Sheikh-ji, grandson of Lord Kutbul Aktāb, 141.
 Makkah, and Madīnah, pensions for the poor of, 127; the pilgrimage to, 127; Sultān Mehmūd III's resolution of a pilgrimage to, 209.
 Malabār pirates, Sultān Mehmūd Begda's naval action with, 63.
 Malhāi, the son of Nāik Chatar, 212; one of the musicians of Daryā Khān, 212.
 Malikji, general of Sultān Bahādūr, 198.
 Malik-Shāh entitled Rukn-ul-Mulk, 92.
 Malik-ul-Hadyah, called Hurmz-ul-Mulk, one of Sultān Muzaḥḥar II's companion, 120; story of him and Sultān Muzaḥḥar II, 120, 121.
 Malik-ush-sharq, district of Nadiād conferred on, 270.
 Malik-ul-Tujjār Dakhni, after the murder of Khājah Jahān flees to Khambāyat, 73; dies, 73; his daughter asked in marriage, 73, 74.
 Mallū Khān, obtains Sārangpur from Sultān Bahādūr, 171; the ruler of Mālwa, 202; house-born slave of the Sultāns of Mālwa, 216; becomes ruler of Mālwa, 216; is given the title of Kādīr Shāh, 216; gives shelter to Imād-ul-mulk, 216; order of Daryā Khān to, 216, his reply to Daryā Khān, 216, 217; expedition of Daryā Khān against, 217.
 Mālwa, Sultān Mehmūd seeks aid from, 7; Alp Khān (afterwards Sultān Hoshang) ruler of, 7; Sultān Muzaḥḥar's incursion into (A. D. 1407), 9; Mūsā Khān assumes authority over, but is expelled (A. D. 1407), Alp Khān restored to power in, 1407; Sultān Ahmed's expedition against (A. D. 1417), 15; 16; Sultān Ahmed's campaign in (A. D. 1422), 18, 19; Sultān Mehmūd Khilji ruler of (A. D. 1451), 24; Sultān Ghiyāsuddīn succeeds Mehmūd Khilji on the throne of (A. D. 1459), 46; Sultān Nāsir-ud-dīn kills his father and ascends the throne of (A. D. 1501), 75; Sultān Mehmūd, son of Nāsirud-dīn sits on the throne of, 92; Hindūs supreme in, under Medāni Rāi, 95; Sultān Muzaḥḥar II's expedition to restore Islām in (A. D. 1512), 95, 96, 97; conquered by Sultān Bahādūr, 147; Mallū Khān the ruler of, 202; Kādīr Shāh, the ruler of, 211; Imād-ul-Mulk flees to, 211; Shahābuddin appointed the chief holder of, 321.
 Mamrīz Khān, wife's brother of Islām Shāh, kills Fīrūz Khān, 255; and usurps the throne of Dehli, 256.
 Māndal, a town under Jhālāwār, 168.
 Māudān, ancestor of Saharan (q. v.), 1.

- Mandaur, Sultán Mehmd Khilji at, 36; made over to Sultán Mehmd Khilji, 36; Malik Ayáz attacked at, 86; the fort of, built by Sultán Hoshang of Málwá, its strength, 113; invested by Malik Ayáz, 113; Imád-ul-Mulk takes, 178; the emissaries of the Rána of Chittaur at, 180.
- Mandlik Ráo, the Rá'á of Girnár, defeated by Sultán Ahmed, 14; of Sorath, offends Sultán Mahmúd Begdá, 52; who leads an expedition against, 53, 54; and receives his submission, 55; again purchases peace, 55; expostulates with Sultán Mahmúd Begdá, 55; intrigues with his Wazir's wife, 57; is betrayed by him, 57; his conversion to Islám, 57, 58; Sultán Mahmúd Begdá confers estates and title on, 59.
- Mándú, besieged for one year by Zafar Khán (A. D. 1385), 6; Alp Khán regains power in, 9; twice besieged by Sultán Ahmed (A. D. 1421), 18; the people of, 28; capital of Málwá, 46; rebels in, besieged by Sultán Mehmd, 92; besieged by Sultán Muzaffar II (A. D. 1517) 99, 100, 101; Sultán Mehmd Khilji entertains Sultán Muzaffar II, 103; 104, 105; conquered by Sultán Bahádur 147; place of confinement of A-hraf-ul-Mulk, 157; Sultán Bahádur's army at, 177, 178; Sultán Bahádur at, 178; invested by emperor Humáyún, 191; taken by treachery, 191; general massacre at, 191, 192; fort, 193.
- Mánek Chowk, in Ahmedábád, 21; Sultán Ahmed I buried in the mausoleum at, 21; Sultán Muhammad buried at, 24; the tomb of Ráni Ráp Manjhri at, 89.
- Mangalore, Sultán Bahádur at, 201; (also foot note), the situation of, 314; Mirza Khán lays siege to, 314.
- Mangroek otherwise called Muhammadnagar, Bahádur Khán at, 151.
- Mángrol, Sultán Bahádur at, 158, 159; its situation, 201 note; supposed to be the Monoglossum emporium of Ptolemy. (A. D. 150), 201 note.
- Manili, Bahádur's camp at, 168.
- Manjhu, musician and friend of Sultán Bahádur; captured by the Mughals; reception of, by Humáyún; releases his friends; his escape to Gujará, 192.
- Manjhu, Miyán, librarian and chief officer of Emperor Humáyún, at the plunder of Sultán Bahádur's camp, 190; Sheikh Muhammad so called, 251; the father of Sikandar, the author of this history, 258; as an agent to Sayad Mubarak, 258; as an emissary to Mubarak Sháh, 258, 262; brings a letter to Sayad Mubarak from Sayad Husain, 266; at Dholka, 266, 268; called from there, 269; story of him and a dervish, 269; as a messenger of Sayad Mubarak, 273; his son Sikandar in the expedition against Muhammad Husain, 312; with the army against Sultán Muzaffar, 320; with the army of Khán-i-Aázam, 323; born in the reign of Sultán Mehmd III.
- Máusingh, Raja of Jháláwár fights with Sháh Jiva, son of Sheikhan Saláhdár and kills him (1530-31), 168.
- Mansúr Khán, title of Malik Burhán, 91.
- Mansúr Khán, the title of Suleiman, 162.
- Maroli, a village, Sayad Hámíd attacked by Ibráhim Musain, near, 307, 308.
- Martyred Lord, The, after death title of Tátár Khán, 8.
- Mastí Khán, nickname of Sheikh Malik, see Sheikh Malik.
- Masúd Malik, joins Bahádur Khán at Muhammadnagar, 161.
- Mathá Khán, son of Muzaffar Sháh in battle near Kapudwanj, 31.
- Maudúd-ul-Mulk, given the title of Taghalak Khán, 162.
- Mauliya, Citadél of Chámpáner taken by Humáyún (A. D. 1535), 194; fort of, Fattúji hides himself in, 221.
- Medání Rái, his rise to power, 94, 95; defeats Sultán Muhammad, 95; campaigning in Chanderi, 96; his oppression of Muslims in Málwá, 98; his treatment of Sultán Mehmd Khilji, 98; Muzaffar II's expedition against, 100; he marches on Ihar but flees to Ujjain, 98; intrigues for the relief of Mándú, 100, 101; his action after Sultán Mehmd's flight, 105; his downfall and subsequent career, 106; some of his relatives killed in a skirmish with the Musalmans, 106; defeated by the Musalmans, 112; lures away Silehdí, 113; gains support from the Rána of Chittaur, 113.
- Medánt Rái, Bahádur's general at Chittaur, 179.
- Mehdi, Sayad Muhammad Jaunpur claims to be the, 90.

Mehmúdábád, founded by Sultán Mehnúd Begdá 65; Sultán Bahádúr receives homage at, 153; battle at Kanij between Sultán Bahádúr and the Mughals, victory of Sultán, Bahádúr near, 198; Sultán Mehmúd III makes it his capital, (A. D. 1546) 237, 242; deer-park built by Sultán Mehmúd III, 242; horrible murders of Sultán and his ministers at (A. D. 1554), 261.

Mehmúd-Áká, Sultán Bahádúr's admiral, arms his vessels, opposes Is-hák, and kills many of his Hindu followers, 157, 158.

Mehmúd Bahmani, Sultán, ruler of the Dakhan, contemporary of Sultán Mahmúd Begdá, 46; revolt against, 78; his regents roused to action against Bahádúr Giláni, 74; Nizám-ul-Mulk and his ancestors staves of, 169.

Mehmúd Barki, Malik, nominated to subdue Násir, 16; besieges Thálner, 16.

Mehmúd Begdá, Sultán (see Fateh Khán), account of his youth, 36, 37, 38; ascends the throne of Gujarát (A. D. 1459), 41; the origin and cause of the surname Begdá, 42; his character, 42; his enormous appetite, 42; takes the fort of Chámpáner, 42, 46, 67; suppresses a conspiracy, 48, 44; prosperous condition of Gujarát in his reign, 46, 46; his contemporaries, 42; compared with Sultán Mahmúd Ghaznavi, 46; his excellences, 46; his fondness of trees, 47; the father of his people, 47; his devotions, 48; story of him and Malik Sárang, 48; Sheikh Siráj-ud-dín puts to test the faith of, for holy men, 48, 49; story of him and Sheikh Siráj-ud-dín, 48; spiritual follower of Sheikh Rahmatulláh 49; his knowledge of religious matters, 49, 50; a disciple of Sheikh Rahmat-ulláh, 49, 78; reviews his army near Knapadwanj, 50; assists Nizám Sháh of Dakhan against Mahmúd Khilji, 50, 51; reviews his army at Thanesar, 51; threatens to attack Mándu if Mahmúd Khilji again invades the Dakhan, 51; collects arms for religious war, 52; his expedition to Baroda, 52; condemns to death Malik Háji and Malik Káhn, 52; expedition against Gírnár and Júnágadh, 52; an instance of his strict justice, 52; besieges Júnágadh, 54; storming of the Maháilah defile 54; preparations for the siege of Júnágadh, 54; exacts tribute and presents from Ráo of Sorath, 55; declines to invade Málwá, 55; other expeditions into Sorath, 55; capitulation of Gírnár, 55, 56; siege of Júnágadh (A. D. 1469), 55, 56, 58; converts Ráo Mandlik to Islám, 57; cause of the invasion of Júnágadh and Gírnár 58; cause of Ráo Mandlik adopting Islám, 57, 58; the building of Mustufábád, 58; takes up his residence there, 58; appoints the governor of Ahmedábád to suppress sedition during his absence, 59; confers estates and title on Ráo Mandlik, 59; campaign in Sindh, 59, 60; conquest of Jagat and Sánkhodwár, 60; chastises the lawless tribes of Sindh (A. D. 1472), 60; the cause of the invasion of Jagat and Sánkhodwár, 60, 61; naval engagement off Sánkhodwár (A. D. 1473) 62; naval action with Malabári pirates, 63; builds a mosque at Sánkhodwár, 63; his return to Ahmedábád, 63; lays waste country of Chámpáner, 64; visits Mustufábád, 64; his sympathy with the bereaved, 43; founds Mahmúdábád; 65; conspiracy against him (A. D. 1480), 65; he tests the loyalty of his nobles, 65; visits Ahmedábád, his expedition against Chámpáner, 66, 67; makes Chámpáner his capital and names it Muhammadábád, 67; stories illustrative of his character and times, 69; story of him and the gardeners, 69; story of him, the jeweller, and the Kázi, 70, 71; gets redress for plundered merchants from Rájá of Sirohi, 73; spends four years at Muhammadábád, 73; his expeditions against Bahádúr Giláni at Dáhol, 74; Alí Khán's revolt against him, 74, 75; visits the forts of Thálner and Dharmál, 75; his campaign against Adil Khán Fárúki (A. D. 1499), 75; prepares for campaign against Násir-ud-dín of Málwá, 75; but abandons it, 75; undertakes no military enterprise for seven years, 75; campaigns against Europeans (A. D. 1507-8), 75; supports Álám Khán, son of Hasan Khán on the throne of Asír, 76; at Thálner, settles the affairs of Asír and Burhánpúr, 77; his farewell to the holy men of Pattan, 78; visits tomb of Sheikh Ahmed Khattá and his own, 78; his death (A. D. 1511), 78; the companions of his youth, 78, 79, 80, 81; his estimate of Khudawand Khán, 87; converts to Islám Sárang and his brother, 88; his four sons, 89; he has his son Apá Khán poisoned, 89; commits Khalil Khán to the care of Hans Báí, the Sultán's stepmother, 90; Adil Khán takes refuge with, 114; Khalil Khán learns the Kurán by heart for his father's benefit, 118.

Mehmúd Bukhári, Sayad, son of Sayad Jalál, 121; the anecdote of, 213.

Mehmúd Gáwán, see Khájah Jahán.

Mehmúdi, a coin, 302, note.

Mehmúd Jálándharpuri, Kázi Maulavi, disciple of Lord Sháh Álám, at the siege of Chittaur, 187; his death (A. D. 1534), 187.

Mehmúd Kázi, the chief Kázi of Mángalore, brings about the death of Sheikh Yásín Suwari, 201.

- Mehmúd Khán, son of Fírúz Sháh ascends the throne of Dehli as Sultán Mehmúd (q. v.) (A. D. 1394), 6.
- Mehmúd Khán, son of Lutf Khán, grandson of Muzaffar II and nephew of Bahádúr Sháh, born (A. D. 1501), 205; confined at Bálwál by Muhammad Sháh his cousin, 206; brought to Ahmedábád, 207; slain by Mubárak Sháh, 207.
- Mehmúd Khilji, Sultán, his character, 24; assists Gangdás of Chámpáner against Sultán Muhammad Gujaráti, 24; intrigues with Sheikh Kamál for the kingdom of Gujarát, 25; invades Gujarát, 25; besieges Sultánábád, 26; intrigues for the possession of the fort of Bharúch, 27; plunders Baroda, 27; battle with Sultán Kutb-ud-dín near Kapadwanj, 31; defeated, 32; the cause of the defeat of, 33; lends an army to conquer Nágór, 32; Mu'ahid Khán from Nágór takes refuge with him, 33; treaty of peace with Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 35; his joint expedition with Sultán Kutb-ud-dín against Rána Kumbhá, 35; acquires Mandesúr from Rána Kumbhá, 35; marches upon Chittaur, 35; invades the Dakhan, 50; besieges Nizám Sháh in Bídár, 50; returning to Málwá before Sultán Mehmúd Begdá, gets into difficulties in Gondwánah, 51; again invades the Dakhan (A. D. 1465), 51; again retreats before Mehmúd Begdá, 51; who threatens to attack Mándú, if again invaded, 51; dies and is succeeded by his son Ghiás-ud-dín (A. D. 1469), 55.
- Mehmúd Khilji, Sultán, son of Násir-ud-dín King of Málwá deposed by Khájah-Jahán 92; lays siege to Mándú, 92; gives all power to Medáni Rái, 95; campaign in Chanderi, 96; his flight from Medáni Rái to Sultán Muzaffar II, 98, 99; Muzaffar II restores Mándú to, 102, 103; he gives to Muzaffar II the waistbelt of Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 103; his women, 103; entertains Sultán Muzaffar II at Mándú, 104, 105; in expedition to Karwan is taken prisoner by the Rána of Chittaur, 106; who restores him to Mándú, 107; his son kept as a hostage by the Rána of Chittaur, 107; joint Sultán Muzaffar's army, 113; regains his son from the Rána of Chittaur, 113; plunders territories of the Rána of Chittaur, 165; his hostility to Silahdíl and Sikandar Khán, 165; confronted by Ratansi at Ujjain, 165; sends emissaries to Sultán Bahádúr, 165; avoids meeting Sultán Bahádúr, 166; capitulates to him, 167; sent a prisoner to Gujarát, 167; his seven sons, 167; is killed at Dohad, 168; their fate, 168; his golden girdle and jewelled crown given as tribute to Sultán Bahádúr from the Rána of Chittaur, 179.
- Mehmúd, Malik, entitled Kháni-Aázam, suppresses revolt of Nasí: Khán, 16.
- Mehmúd, Munshi Mullá, formerly in the service of Emperor Humáyún and afterwards of Sultán Bahádúr, his mischievous letter to Humáyún, 184-85.
- Mehmúdpur, Sultán Bahádúr at, 166.
- Mehmúd Samarkandi Maulána, a port captured by the pirates on his way to Samarkand 60; his troubles, 61; avenged by Sultán Mehmúd Begdá (A. D. 1472) 63.
- Mehmúd, Sayad, son of Sayad Burhán-ud dín, and father of Sayad Jalál (Sheikhji), 140; alias Sháh Budha, Saint Sheikhji's advice to Bahádúr Khán about, 140.
- Mehmúd, Sultán, ascends the throne of Dehli (A. D. 1394), 6; entitled Násir-ud-dín Sháh son of Sultán Muhammad and grandson of Sultán Fírúz Sháh of Dehli, 7; flees before Taimur to Pattan (A. D. 1398-99), 7; seeks aid from Zafar Khán and from Málwá, 7; goes to Kannauj, 7; besieged in Kannauj by Ikbál Khán, 9; returns to power in Dehli, 9; defended by Sultán Muzaffar, 9.
- Mehmúd II, Sultán Nasir Khán, son of Sultán Muzaffar II, placed on the throne of Gujarát (A. D. 1526), 144, 149; Imád-ul-Mulk's endeavours to support, 152; abandoned on the approach of Bahádúr Sháh, 153; poisoned by Bahádúr Sháh, 157.
- Mehmúd III, Sultán, son of Latíf Khán and the daughter of Behráw Khán, 208; born in Sorath (A. D. 1525), 208; ascends the throne of Gujarát (A. D. 1536), 208; the astrological future of, 208; goes over to the side of Daryá Khán, 210; at the battle of Pátri, 210; at the battle of Dangri, 211; at Burhánpur, 211; returns to Gujarát, 211; lodged outside Ahmedábád by Daryá Khán, 217; insulted by Daryá Khán, 217, 218; gets the treasure of Daryá Khán, 218; receives help from Alam Khán, 218; at Jámwá, 218; in the battle of Dáhor, 219, 220; withdraws to Ránpúr, 220; goes to Kot Pálliád, 220; besieges Chámpáner, 221; defeats Fattáji, 221; takes possession of the harem and treasure of Daryá Khán, 221; imprisons Fattáji in the fort of Súrat, 221; his bravery, 221; at Chámpáner, 221; appoints Ashraf Humáyún as the minister, 221; recalls Imád-ul-Mulk from Mándú, and makes him the fief-holder of Broach, 222; entitles Charji to Muháfi: Khán, 222; Charji proposes the death of Sultán Alá-ud-dín, and Malikji Shujá-át Khán to, 222; effects of his favour to the mean, 222, 223, 224; quarrel between him and the nobles for Charji, 223, 224; his rule ceases, 224; kept in confinement by his nobles, 225; conspiracy of the nobles against, 225, 226, 227; is aided by

- Mujáhid Khán and Mu'áhid-ul-Mulk, 226, 227; is restored to his government, 230; Imád-ul-Mulk's petition to, 232; goes against the rebels, Daryá Khán and Álam Khán, 233; orders to plunder Imád-ul-Mulk's camp, 235; sends Sayad Mubarak and Násir-ul-Mulk against the rebels, 236; bestows honours and titles on his nobles, 237, 238; the treatment of the Hindus by, 239; as a spiritual follower of Álam Sayad, 240; the lilt of the holy and learned men of, 240; his attitude towards holy men, 241; the generosity and virtues of, 241; story of him and a poor man, 242; makes Mehmudábád his capital (A. D. 1546) 242; builds a deer-park, 242, 243; assassinated by Burhán, 243, 244; interred in the shrine of Sheikh Ahmed Khattá, 251; his reign, 25
- Mehwá-, 314; note.
- Melmán, city of (otherwise called Káreth). Alif Khán flees to, 75.
- Mesar, the fort of, besieged by Sultán Ahmed, 18.
- Me quita, Portuguese convert to Islam and gunner of Sultán Bahádur, 193.
- Mewát, the country of, Sultán Muzaffar II at, 115.
- Mhowras (Bassia-latifolia), are found in Gujarát, 47.
- Mián Sheikhi, one of the companions of Sultán Muzaffar II, 121; his intercourse with Sultán Muzaffar II, 121; intercedes for Latif-ul-Mulk, 124.
- Miránji Sayad, grandson of Hazarat Sháh Álam, preceptor of Sultán Sikandar, 149.
- Mirán Muhammad Sháh Asiri marches against Changíz Khán, 298; deceived by Sher Khán, 298.
- Mirán, Sayad, son of Sayad Mubarak brings back Ítimád Khán to his father's side, 269; at Dholka, 272; Alif Khán flees to, 272; in battle with his father, 281; Imád-ul-Mulk promises estates to, 284; is deprived of his estates given by Ítimád Khán, 285; goes to Dhanduka, 292; intervention of, 292; brings about a peace between Ítimád and Sher Khán, 301; dies (A. D. 1573), 303.
- Mirghi Bibi, sister of Bibi Mughli, wife of Sháh Álam and daughter of Jám Júná, ruler of Sindh, 36; dies, 38.
- Mir Sayad Sháh Mirza, a great Sayad, 240.
- Mir Sháh, man of high intellectual attainments in the court of Gujarát Sultán, 168.
- Mirza Ihtiram, son of Khán-i-Aázam, 324; in the battle against Sultán Muzaffar, 324.
- Mirza Khán, nephew of Sháháb-ud-dín Ahmed, 314; sent against Amín Khán, 314; lays siege to Mangalore, 314; is defeated by Amín Khán, 314; son of Byráam Khán, sent against Sultán Muzaffar III, 319; defeat; Sultán Muzaffar III (A. D. 1685-86), 320; his expedition against Sorath, 321, 322; recalled to Dehli, 322.
- Mirza Muhammad Mughal, ordered to lead an army to India and besieges Multán, 7.
- Mirza Sháh, grandson of Sultán Husein Bábakara of Khurásán, comes to Changíz Khán, 293.
- Mithápúr, one of the suburbs of Ahmedábád, 79.
- Moázzam and Aázam, Khurásánis, at the court of Sultán Mehmúd Begda, their works, 89.
- Mohanráo, professor of dancing in service of Daryá Khán, 213.
- Moid-ud-dín, son of Firoz Khán, son of Sultán Muzaffar, ruler of Baroda, raises revolt against Sultán Ahmed, 11; his rebellion suppressed, 11; again raises rebellion in Ídar against Sultán Ahmed, 12; flees to Nagár, 13; betrayed by Rájá of Ídar, he joins Shams Khán, 13; eventually killed in battle, 13.
- Moin-ud-dín Kázrání, Maulána, Sultán Mehmúd Begda's last visit to, 78.
- Morámlí, a village in the Purganah of Sáoñli on the river Mahi, 64; Sultán Mehmúd Begda at, 64; otherwise called Rasúlabád (q. v.) 95; Muzaffar II at, 93.
- Morasa, rebels at, 12; besieged by Sultán Ahmed, 12; treachery of rebels in, 12; the storming of, 13; Sultán Ahmed and Sultán Hoshong at, 15; Alaf Khán revolts against Sultán Mehmúd Begda at, 74, 75; Sultán Muzaffar II at, 95; Gujarát armies at, 112; rebuilt by Muzaffar II, 114; occupied by Bahádur Khán, 151; Azdul-Mulk at, 151; Sultán Bahádur at, 164.
- Morbi, Tughlak Khán, governor of, defeated by Is-hák, 154.
- Musta-min-uzzamán of Khorasan, 183.
- Muazzam Khán and other nobles joins Bahádur Khán, 153.
- Mubarak Bukhari Sayad Miran, Bahádur's general, 198; at an entertainment of Daryá Khán with Sultán Mehmúd III, 217; intercedes for Álam Khán, 232; defeats Daryá Khán and Álam Khán, 236; Tuhtat-us Sádát written for, 236; kept up an

- army of Bukhārī Sayads and Faulādi Pathāns, 253; also of Afghān, Lodī and Shīrwānī tribes, 254; Sultān Ahmed Shāh II the spiritual follower of, 255; the generosity of, 256; makes peace with Mubārak Shāh, 257, 262; takes advice of Bibi A'lam Khātūn, 258; receives a letter from Sayad Husein, 265; attacks the army of Nā ir-ul-Mulk, 267; goes to Ahmedābād, 267; story of him and horse-merchants, 268; returns to Ahmedābād, 270; his share of the kingdom of Gujarāt, 270; at Sayadpur, 270; receives, A'lam Khān Lodī, 271; arranges some estates for him, 271, 272; gives refuge to Alif Khān, 272; plot for the ruin of, 273, 274; but saved by I'timād Khān and Imād-ul-Mulk, 274, 275; defeats A'lam Khān, 276; overthrown by Imād-ul-Mulk and I'timād Khān, 279, 280; is slain in battle, 280; the miracles of, 281, 282; obtains salvation, 282; the sanctity of, 283.
- Mubārak Khān, son Ahmed Shāh, joins the court of Sultān Mahmūd of Mālwa, 261, mediate between Sultān Kutb-ud-dīn and Mahmūd Khilji (A. D. 1451), 26.
- Mubārak Khān, brother of Muhammad Shāh, in confinement at Biāwal, 205; treacherously murders his nephew and ascends throne himself, 207, 208.
- Mubārak, Malik, entitled Ifsikhar-ul-Mulk, 91.
- Mubārak Shāh, the king of Burhānpūr, 211; harbours Imād-ul-Mulk, 211; asked to capture Imād-ul-Mulk, 211; the reply to Daryā Khān of, 211; gives battle to Daryā Khān at Dangri, 211; defeated at Dangri, 211; withdraws to the fort of Asir, 211; King of Asir and Burhānpūr, 256; his expedition against the nobles, 256, 262; the offspring of Al Fārūk, 257; makes peace with Sayad Mubārak, 257, 262; his invasion of Gujarāt, 276; retires to Pilgām, 276; with I'timād Khān invades Gujarāt, 277; compensated, 278.
- Mubārīz-ul-Mulk, the title of Nafrshādi, 91.
- Mubārīz-ul-Mulk, the title of Malik Husein (q. v.), 108.
- Mubārīz-ul-Mulk, the title of the son of Nizām-ul-Mulk, 152.
- Mufarrah Khān, Nizām, viceroy of Gujarāt, 5; entitled Rā-ti Khān (q. v.) 5.,
- Muftih-ul-Mulk, son of Malik Tawakkul, noble of Mehmūd Shāh, raised to the post of Imād-ul-Mulk, 155.
- Mughal chiefs, the list of, at Ahmedābād, 315; go to Sultān Muzaḥfar, 315.
- Mughals, defeat Jām Fīrūz, king of Sindh, 162; Sultān Bahādur harbours refugees from, 164; invade Gujarāt under Emperor Humāyūn, 186, 197; are driven out of Gujarāt, 198; length of their occupation, 198; again invade under Akbar Shāh, 309, 311.
- Muhāfiz Khān, Jamāl-ud-dīn, the armour-bearer, entitled as, 59; the grandfather of the author of Tārīkh-i-Bahādur Shāhī, 59; his success, 59; made viceroy, vazir, 59; executes Bhīm, Rā'ā of Jagat, 63; Ahmedābād entrusted to the care of, 72.
- Muhāfiz Khan, see Fattūji.
- Muhāfiz Khān Bakkāl-Imād-ul-Mulk sends to the out post of Dhanej to prevent Bahādur Khān, 153; joins Latif Khān against Bahādur Khān, 155; defeat and flight of, 157;
- Muhāfiz Khān, Charji, the birdcatcher (q. v.), so entitled by Sultān Mehmūd III, 218.
- Muhammad, the Prophet, disputed tradition concerning, 49, 50; the nativity of, 121.
- Muhammadābād, Chāmpāner so named, 67; built by Sultān Mahmūd Begdā, 67; its beauty, 68; capital of Gujarāt, 150; Bahādur Khān at, 159.
- Muhammad Afzal Khān, sent against Sultān Muzaḥfar, 318; intrigues with him, 318.
- Muhammad Bukhārī Sayad, Sādāt Khān obtain grant of Batwa from Sinkandar, 149.
- Muhammad Bukhārī, Sayad, sent by Akbar against Sher Khān, 311; killed in battle near Pattan, 311.
- Muhammad Hayāt, wakil of Malik-ut-Tujjār Dakhni, rejects Bahādur Gilāni's offer of marriage, 73; killed by the assassins of Bahādur Gilāni, 74.
- Muhammad Hīrām-ul-Mulk Khājāh conspires against Malik Shābān and Sultān Mahmūd Begdā, 42.
- Muhammad Husein Mīrza, grandson of Sultān Husein Bābakara of Khurāsān comes to Changīz Khān, 293; called by I'timād Khān, 303; separates himself from Mīrza Ibrāhīm, 311; goes to Rānpūr, 311; joins Sher Khān, 311; defeated near Pattan by the nobles of Akbar; 311; captures Broach, 312, 313; at Cambay, 313; flees from there and joins Ikhtiyār-ul-Mulk, 313; dies (A. D. 1574), 313.
- Muhammad Ikhtiyār, Malik, one of the companions of Sultān Mahmūd Begdā's youth, 79; refuses the title of Khān, 79; leaves the work, 79, 80; becomes a saint, 81, 82.

- Muhammad Jaanpuri, Sayad, comes to Ahmedábád, 90; efficacy of his preaching, 90; footnote, 90; anecdotes of, 90, 91; his travels, 91; is persecuted, 91; dies (A. D. 1505), 91.
- Muhammad Kálá, son of Sultán Mahmád Begdá and Ráni Rápmanjhari, 89.
- Muhammad Khán, the son of Sher Khán, 309; takes the Jehán Penáh fort of Pattan, 311; joins Sher Khán, 311; defeated near Pattan by the nobles of Akbar, 311; is joined by Muhammad Husein, 313.
- Muhammad Khán, known as Khán-i-Kalán, 312; sent by Akbar against Sher Khán, 311; Pattan given as an estate to, 312.
- Muhammad Khán Asrí, son of Ádilkhán, Sultán's sister's son assisted Imád-ud-Mulk Káwel, 160; received by Sultán Bahádúr, 160; joins Sultán Bahádúr at Dharavil, 162; marries sister of Bahárijí Rájá of Baglána, 162; Sultán Bahádúr sends him to join Kaiser Khán against the Dakhani confederate forces, 163; in battle in Burhánpur, 163; accompanies Sultán Bahádúr into Málwá, 165; at the taking of Mándu, 166; leaves Sultán Bahádúr, 168; obtains title of Muhammad Shah, 169.
- Muhammad Lashkari, Sultán, King of the Dakhan, put to death Khájah Mehmúd otherwise called Khájah Jahán, 73; dies, 73.
- Muhammad Mákhá or Bákhá, son of Imád-ul-Mulk Asrí, entitled Gházi Khán, 77.
- Muhammad Mirak sent against Sultán Muzaffar, 318.
- Muhammad Muháziz Khán, dároghah of Muhammadábád, receives the fugitive Sultán Muhammad of Málwá, 92.
- Muhammadnagar, Mángroch so called, Sultán Bahádúr at, 151.
- Muhammad Rafi. Khájah, in the battle against Sultán Muzaffar, 324; killed on the battlefield, 324.
- Muhammad, Sayad, father of Sayad Jalál Munawwar-ul-mulk, 121; slain in battle, 121.
- Muhammad, Sayad, brother's son of Sayad Mubárák, killed in battle, 264; son of Sayad Fidá killed in battle, 264.
- Muhammad Sháh Ádil, Mamriz Khán usurps the throne of Dehli under the title of, 256.
- Muhammad Sháh Asrí, Muhammad Khán (q. v.) receives the title of, 169; sent against Bikramájít, the son of the Ráná of Chittaur, 173; receives orders to march and capture Gágran from Sultán Bahádúr, 176; at the taking Mande-úr, 177; Bahádúr's general at Chittaur (A. D. 1532), 178; Bahádúr's general sent against Nizám-ul-Mulk Dakhul, 180; Bahádúr's nephew pursues Mughals as far as Ujjain, 198, 216; sister's son of Sultán Bahádúr, and ruler of Asir and Burhánpur, 202; remains at Ujjain, 202; informed of Bahádúr's death and his account, 202; invited to Ahmedábád by the nobles on the death of Sultán Bahádúr, 202; lamentations of, over the death of Sultán Bahádúr, 205; pines for Sultán Bahádúr and dies, 205, 216; appointed heir-apparent by Sultán Bahádúr, 206; confines Mehmúd Khán and his brother Mubárák Khán at Biawal, 206.
- Muhammad Sháh Fáruki, Muhammad Sháh Asrí known as, (q. v.).
- Muhammad I Sháh, Sultán, surnamed Tátár Khán (q. v.), son of Zafar Khán ascends the throne of Gujarát (A. D. 1403), 8; his campaign against Nádót, 8; marches against Dehli, 8; his death, 8; buried at Pattan, 8; called "the Martyred Lord," 8; story of him and Sheikh Ahmad Gaujbakhsh, 8.
- Muhammad, Sheikh, alias Sheikh Manjhú (q. v.); father of the author of this history, 254.
- Muhammad, Sultán, son of Fírúz Tughlak Sháh, reigns with his father, 4; flees before Fírúz Tughlak, his father (A. D. 1388), 4; defeated, flees to Nagarkote, 5; struggle for the throne between him and Abú Bakr, 5; gets possession of the throne, 5; sends Zafar Khán to Gujarát against Rásti Khán, 5; his death, 6; anarchy in the kingdom of Delhi after his death, 7.
- Muhammad II, Sultán Muhammad Khán, son of Ahmed Sháh, ascends the throne of Gujarát (A. D. 1443), 23; his son Fateh Khán (afterwards Sultán Mahmád Begdá) born (A. D. 1445), 23; expedition against Ídar, 23; lays waste Bágad (Wágad), 23; his character, 23; expedition against Chámpáner, 24; abandons that place and retires to Kothrá, 24; falls ill at Kothrá, 24; dies (A. D. 1451-2), 24; another account of his death, 24; Sheikh Kamál's intrigue with Mahmád Khiljí against, 25; taking advice of a Wánia, prepares to fly before Mahmád Khiljí, 25; but is poisoned, 26; married Bibi Mughli, daughter of Jám Juna of Sindh, 38.
- Muhammad Táj, Mauláná, the wisest of the Ulamás of Ahmedábád, 91; saves life of Sayad Muhammad Jaanpuri, 91.

Náhsu, ancestor of Baháran.

Naipura, the meeting of Álam Khán and Daryá Khán at, 280.

Najm-ud-dín, Kázi, ruler of religious ordinances in Ahmedábád, comes out to congratulate Sultán Mahmúd Begda, 64; story of him, the goldsmith, and Sháh Álam, 70, 71, 72; becomes Sháh Álam's deputy, 72.

Naku, Agent of Rána, Mandestúr in charge of, 177.

Nanádar, the town of, given to Mubárák Sháh, 278.

Nándod, campaign of Sultán Muhammad Sháh (Tátár Khán), 8; Sírí, Rája of, 15; the territories of, plundered and laid waste by Malik Mehmúd Bark, 16; rebellion in, suppressed (A. D. 1417), 16; Sultán Bahádúr goes to, for hunting, 158. Rájá of, waits on Sultán Bahádúr, 159.

Narlád, pun on the word, 224; rebels at, 11; Sultán Bahádúr at (A. D. 1525), 168.

Narsing Dev, nephew of Narsing, Rája of Gwattar, comes to Sultán Bahádúr with large army of Rajputs and gets service, 162; Bahádúr's General in charge of Chámpáner death of (A. D. 1536), entitled Khán Jehán, 194.

Narwári, Rájpipla, the capital of the country of, 314.

Nasr, the son of Ráje Eynul Mulk, the ruler of Asir and Burhánpúr, Sultán Ahmed I repels an attack of (A. D. 1417) 15; Adil Khán (q. v.) besieges the fort of Thálnér, 15; defeated, he surrenders to Sultán Ahmed I, 16.

Násir Khán, son of Sultán Muzaffar II, 136; and a slave-girl, 136; son of Sultán Muzaffar named Mehmúd Sháh, and placed on the throne by Imád-ul-Mulk, 144, 145, 149, 150; given by Imád-ul-Mulk Khush Kadam, in charge of the head-Chamberlain after being set adrift, 153; (Styled Mehmúd II, 64 by Khush Kadam) poisoned with three other princes, and buried near Latif Khán in Sultán Sikandar's Mausoleum, 157.

Násir Khán, Broach in charge of, 320; flees from there, 321; kills Háji Samak Khán, 321.

Násir Mirza, Mughal Governor of Pattan, marches to Ahmedábád, encamps at Ghíaspur, 197.

Násir Self called Bázdár Khán, at the siege of Morásá, 12.

Nasirshádi, entitled Mubáriz-ul-Mulk, 91.

Násir-ud-dín, son of Ghías-ud-dín, Governor of Bengal, 259; his expedition against his son Muizz-ud-dín Keikubád, 259, 260, 261.

Násir-ud-dín, name of Humáyún Pád-sháh of Dehli, 176.

Násir-ud-dín Muhammad Sháh, royal title of Tátár Khán, 8; marches against Dehli, 8; dies at Pattan; 8.

Násir-ud-dín Sháh, the title of Muhammad Sháh, 6.

Násir-ud-dín, Sultán, son of Sultán Ghías-ud-dín of Málwá, flays his father and ascends the throne, 75; makes submission to Sultán Mehmúd Begda, 75.

Násir-ud-dín Sultán, Emperor of Dehli (A. D. 1316-1320), 177.

Násir-ul-Mulk, the title of Abáji Gujaráti, 237.

Násir-ul-Mulk, the origin of 265, note; the ambition of, 257; conspires with Sayad Mubárák, 264, returns to Ahmedábád with Sultán Ahmed II, 264; arrests Zein-ud-dín, 264; his expedition against other nobles, 264; encamps with the Sultán at Kamamid 264; attacked by Sayad Mubárák, 267; goes to Chámpáner and dies, 268.

Nasir-ul-Mulk, given the title of Katlak Khán, 152.

Nasrat-Khán, Alp Khán placed in charge of, 9.

Nasrat-Khán, in the service of Adil Khán.

Nasrat-ul-Mulk, the title given to Malik Sher, 152.

Naurang Khán, sent by Akbar against Sher Khán, 311; at the siege of Cambay, 312, 313; comes to assist Khán Khánán from Málwá, 320; besieges Broach, 320; sent against the Jám and Sultán Muzaffar, 323, 324; sent against Júnágadh, 325.

Nawánagar-Town, Ishák in revolt at, 157; Sultán Bahádúr at, 158; Capital of the Jám, 322.

Náyak Abhir, one of the musicians of Daryá Khán, 212.

Náyak Bakhshó, the father of Náyak Hussaini, 212.

Náyak Chatar, the father of Rang Khán, Mahár, 212.

Náyak Gopal, the professor of Music, 213.

Náyak Hussaini, the son of Náyak Bakhshin, one of the musicians of Daryá Khán, 212.

- Nazarbár, a dependency of Gujarát, 6; invaded by Malik Nasir (Adil Khan). (A. D. 1394), 6; Nasir Khan in, 16; Sultán Ahmed marches against Nasir Khan in (A. D. 1417), 15; Sultán Mahmúd Begdá at, 50, 51, 75, Aziz-ul-Mulk, fief-holder of, 77; Latif Khan takes shelter in the tracts of, 141; rebellion of Latif Khan at, 186, Sultán Bahádúr at his interview with Imád-ul-Mulk and Muhammad Khan, bestowal of honour upon Imád-ul-Mulk, 160.
- Nazukleher, a slave girl favourite of Sultán Sikandar and afterwards of Sultán Bahádúr; her sorrowful death, 147-48.
- Nehrwalá, otherwise called Pattan, 95; Aín-ul-Mulk, fief-holder of, (A. D. 1512), 95; Bahádúr Khan receives homage at (A. D. 1526), 151.
- Nihál Khan, of Burár, Mubarak Sháh allies with, 276.
- Nisár-ul-Mulk Ghori, manager of the estates of Mujáhid Khan Behlím, 225; defeats the rebels, Daryá Khan and Álam Khan out of Gujarát, 236.
- Nizám Khan, has charge of Ráwal Patái, Rájá of Chámpáner and his minister, 67.
- Nizám Khan, the title of Malik Husein, 107.
- Nizám Khan, title of the son of Khan-Khanán, 152.
- Nizám, Mufarráh Khan, Governor of Gujarát, 5; tyrannizing is superseded, 5; rebellion of; Gujarát under his rule, 5; Zafar Khan's letter to, 5; marches against Zafar Khan, 5; is defeated and slain (A. D. 1392), 50.
- Nizám Sháh, son of Humáyún Sháh Dakhni, 50; seeks aid of Mahmúd Begdá against Mahmúd Khilji, 50; again assisted by Mahmúd Begda against Mahmúd Khilji, 51; defeats Rána Sângá at Ahmednagar, 85.
- Nizám-ud-dín Ali Khalifah Mir, Vazir of Bábur Pádsháh, 176.
- Nizám-ul-Mulk, Vazir, at the siege of Morásá, 12; sent against rebels, 12, 13.
- Nizám-ul-Mulk, the title of Malik Ísá, 45.
- Nizám-ul-Mulk, fief-holder of Ahmednagar, ordered to go against Ráimal, 98.
- Nizám-ul-Mulk, the title of Malik Husain, 107.
- Nizám-ul-Mulk Bahri, ruler of Ahmednagar, 76; (see Ahmed Khan Bahri) supports Álam Khan, the pretender to the throne of Asir, 76.
- Nizám-ul-Mulk defeats Imád-ul-Mulk Káveli, 160; Bahádúr Khan makes peace with; submits to Sultán Bahádúr, 161; fails in his engagements and is again attacked by Sultán Bahádúr, 162; union of the Armies of Barid Khájah Jahán and Khudáwád Khan; march against Asir and Burhánpur; pursuit by Kaiser Khan at the Sultán's order, 163; comes and meets Sultán Bahádúr and obtains the title of Sháh from him, 169; the origin of, 169; visits Sultán Bahádúr 169; Sultán Bahádúr's campaign against, 180; submits to the Sultán, 180; ruler of the Dakhan, dies (A. D. 1554), 252.
- Nizám-ul-Mulk Ghori, flees from the Dakhan and joins Mahmúd Khilji, 50; instigates Mahmúd Khilji to invade the Dakhan, 50.
- Nizám-ul-Mulk Sultáni, sent to report on Diláwarah, 97; Rái Singh of Náálchah, his brother, 97; his victory near Mándu, 97.
- Nokhan, the name of a well at Junágádh, 54.
- Nuno da Cunha, the Portuguese Viceroy at Bombay, 177; his formidable expedition repulsed off Díu (A. D. 1533), 177.
- Núr Muhammad Khalífi, an Ambassador of Sultán Bahádúr to the Court of the Emperor Humáyún, 181, 182, 183.

O

- Odu, son of Abul Fateh, 306; in the battle near Maroli, 307.

P

- Pál, Prince Latif Khan in, 156; Bhím, Rájá of, (A.D. 1525), 156; his raids, 156; Ráisingh, Rájá of, plunders Dohad, 157; laid waste by Táj Khan, 157; Táj Khan at, 157; Ráisingh Rájá of, (A.D. 1530-31), 168; the mountains of, 276; Álam Khan in the mountains of, 276.
- Pánipat, Tátár Khan at (A.D. 1395), 7; Ikbál Khan takes the fort of (A. D. 1395), 7; situation of, the plain of, 115; battle between Sultán Ibráhím Lodi and Sultán, Bábar at (A.D. 1525), 115; Bahádúr Khan at, 150.

- Parántij, the town of, fifteen miles from Ahmednagar, 110; Gujarát army at, 110.
- Parinda,—Wealthy city in the territories of Khájah Jahán, plundered by Malik Amín, 168.
- Parmár, the name of a tribe, 224; pun on the word, 224.
- Pátri, a village of Viramgám, battle near, 210.
- Pattan, Zafar Khán at (A. D. 1392), 5; Sultán Mehmúd flees before Teimúr to (A. D. 1398-99), 7; Sultán Mehmúd Sháh (Tátár Khán) buried in (A. D. 1408), 8; Sultán Muzaffar buried at (A. D. 1410), 10, 159; Sultán Mehmúd Bagdá's last visit to (A. D. 1510), 78; Mauláná Muin-ud-dín Kázzuni and Tájj-ud-dín Suyáti, the learned men of, 78; Ainulmulk, sief-holder of (A. D. 1512), 95; (North Gujarát) visited by Sultán Bahádúr on his way back from Dúngarpúr, 159; held by Yádgár Násir Mirza for emperor Humáyún, 197; besieged by I'timád Khán, 290; battle near, 311; given to Nawwáb Mir Muhammad Khán, 313.
- Páyindah Khán Afghán, meets Bahádúr Khán at Pá nipat, 150.
- Pethápúr, a village belonging to a Hindu chief, 230; Álam Khán flees to, 230.
- Pflugám, a village Mubárák Sháh retires to, 276.
- Pir, the son of Izáz-ul-Mulk, Mandesúr in charge of, 177.
- Pir Muhammad, Sayad, a Saint and descendant of Kutbi Álam, 240.
- Pir Muhammad Malik, palace servant of Sultán Sikandar killed by Imád-ul-Mulk, 144.
- Pithaura, Rái, sent by Medáni Rái to defend Mándu, 100; killed in the siege of Mándu (A. D. 1518), 101.
- Portuguese, Dún and Sanján ceded to, 286, help Changíz Khán, 286; see Firangia.
- Prágdás joins rebellion against Sultán Ahmed I., 11.
- Prathiráj, brother of Ráná-Sángá, becomes a vassal of Sultán Bahádúr, 162; Rájá of Dúngarpúr meets Sultán Bahádúr and his son, adopts the faith of Islám, 164; Sambal given to the son of, by Sultán Bahádúr (A. D. 1529), 164, 165; one-half of Wágad given to, by Sultán Bahádúr, 165.
- Púnja, son of Ran Mal, Rájá of Ídar, conspires against Sultán Ahmed, 15; seeks forgiveness of Sultán Ahmed, 16; dies, 19.
- Púranmal, son of Silahdí, flight of, 173.

R

- Babári, a class of Hindu camel riders, 306, note.
- Rádharpúr conferred on Fateh Khán Balúch, 270; Battle near, 278; origin of the name of, 287, note; the revenues of, 302, note; rent paid by Bukháris to the Nawwáb of, 312.
- Rahmulah, a village under Bágár (Wágad) Malik Ayáz and Kiwám-ul-Mulk at, 112.
- Ráikhad Gate, one of the gates of Ahmedábád, 316.
- Ráimal, nephew of Ráo Bhím, ousts Bhármal and takes possession of Ídar, 97; contends with the army of Muzaffar II., 98; driven out of Ídar, 107.
- Ráisen, residence of Silehdi, 113, 168; Silehdi of, joins Ráná-Sángá, 113; Mission of Malik Amín Nas to, 170; siege of 171, 172, 173; siege and capture of, by Sultán Bahádúr (A. D. 1581), 174, 175, Juhar performed by the women of, 175.
- Rái Singh, brother of Nizám-ul-Mulk at Naálohah, 97.
- Ráisingh, Rájá of Dúngarpúr, 115.
- Ráisingh, Rájá of Pál plunders Dohad in return for which his country pillaged and laid waste by Tájj Khán, 167.
- Ráj Bái, the daughter of Ráná Mahipat, wife of Sultán Muzaffar II. and mother of Latíf Khán, 136.
- Ráji Muhammad bin Faríd joins Bahádúr Khán at Muhammadnagar, 151.
- Rájpipla, the capital of the country of Narwári, 314.
- Rajputs and Kolis route a Gujarát army (A. D. 1525-26), 142; reduced by Sultán Mehmúd III., and branded (A. D. 1545), 239.
- Rámchandra, ancestor of Saháran, 1; Hindus worship, as God.
- Ráná Kot, a village, the situation of, 276; Gujarát army at, 276.

- Rānakpūr, a village under the Rājās of Ídar, about five miles from Morásá, rebels at (A. D. 1412), 12.
- Rānder, Suburb of Surat, Sultán Bahádúr's visit to, 159.
- Rang Khán, the son of Náikchatar, 212 ; one of the musicians of Daryá Khán, 212.
- Rang Ráo, professor of dancing of Daryá Khán, 213.
- Ráni Bibí, mother of Sultán Sikandar, see Bibí Ráni, 145.
- Ráni Hirábái, daughter of Nagar Ráná, wife of Sultán Mehmúd Begda and mother of Khalíl Khán (q. v.), her death, 90.
- Ráni Saráni, wife of Sultán Mehmúd Begda and mother of Ápá Khán, 89 ; her tomb, 89.
- Ran-Mal, Rāja of Ídar, rebels against Sultán Ahmed, 12 ; betrays his colleagues, and gains favour with Sultán Ahmed, 13.
- Rann, The, a salt water creek ; defeat of Tughlak Khán at, see Katch, 158.
- Ránobar, a dependency of Burhānpur, 77 ; Sayad Asaf Khán at, 77.
- Rānpur, Sultán Bahádúr at, 158 ; the situation of, 220 ; Sultán Mehmúd III. withdraws to, 220.
- Rānpūr-Kotah, its situation, 257 ; Sultán Ahmed II. with his army at, 257 ; Gujarát army at, 278.
- Ranthambhor-Fort, Sultán Bahádúr's expedition against, 180 ; Malik Amín Nas, governor of the fort of, 197.
- Rashíd-ul-Mulk entitled Khudáwand Khán and made Vasir, 91.
- Rásti-Khán, the title of Nizám Mufarraḥ Khán (q. v.), 5 ; Governor of Gujarát (A. D. 1391), 5 ; tyrannizing is superseded, 5 ; rebels, 5 ; Zafar Khán's letter to, 5 ; marches against Zafar Khán, 5 ; is defeated by Zafar Khán and slain (A. D. 1392), 5.
- Rasúlábád, palace of Khedpūr near, 37 ; Sultán Kutb-ud-dín gives order to plunder, 39 ; house and tomb of Sháh Álam at, 57, 88 ; Ráo Mandlik before Sháh Álam at, 57 ; called also Morámli (q. v.), 65.
- Ratanai-Rájá, sends his tribute to Sultán Bahádúr, 164 ; Rájá of Chittaur (A.D. 1529), 164 ; Sharzah Khán with the son of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji ravages the country of, 165 ; plunders the village of Sambal, 165 ; engages in fighting with Sultán Mehmúd Khilji near Ujjain, 165 ; visits Sultán Bahádúr near Karji Ghát, 165 ; honours bestowed on by Sultán Bahádúr 165 ; sends his Vikramájit to the aid of Bhúpat, 172 , flees before Sultán Bahádúr, 173 ; sends emissaries to Sultán Bahádúr 178 ; his mother pleads for Chittaur, 179.
- Ráwul Patáí, Rájá of Chámpáner defeats Malik Asad, 65 ; Sultán Mehmúd Begda's expedition against, 66 ; seeks assistance of Sultán Ghiás-ud-din of Málwá, 66 ; his death (A. D. 1485), 67 ; his eminent son entitled Nizám-ul-Mulk, 67.
- Ráyán Ráo, the title given to Kumbha Gohel, 153.
- Ráyat, Malik, son of Mujáhid-ul-Mulk, given the title of Nasirkhán, 152.
- Rasul-ul-Mulk, comes to see Bahádúr from Muhammadábád, 151 ; overthrows Sultán Ahmed II., 288.
- Reihán, Sayad, brother-in-law of Sayad Hámid, killed in battle near Maroli, 308.
- Rubrah, a village, the situation of, 269 ; rebellions, nobles encamp with Sultán Ahmed II. at, 269.
- Ráh-ud-dín, Maulána, the preceptor of Mubárak Sháh, 258 ; is asked for his intercession, 258.
- Rukaiyyah, Ráje, the daughter of Sultán Muzaffar II. and Bibí Ráni, 136 ; married to Ádil-sháh Burhānpuri, 136.
- Rukn-Khán, commonly known as Ibráhím Khán, governor of Modásá, joins Muíd-ud-dín in his rebellion, 12 ; killed (A. D. 1411-12), 12.
- Ruknuddín, Malik, the minister of Ghiás-ud-dín Tughlak, 5 ; puts him to death, 5.
- Rukn-ul-Mulk, the title of Maliksháh, 92.
- Róm, Tamerlane has differences with Ildarim Bayazid, the Sultán of, 182.

- Rómi-Khán, brings about the death of the sons of Malik Ayás, 86; at the siege of Ráisen, 172; the great Egyptian cannon brought by, 177; conducts siege of Chittaur and its governorship promised to him, 185; being offended by Sultán Bahádur sends secret messages to Humáyún (1534 A. D.), 197; treachery of, 189; joins Emperor Humáyún, 189; execrated by a parrot, 190; reception of, by, Humáyún 190-191; induces Bhúpat Rái to treachery at Mándu, 191; with Humáyún at the siege of Chámpáner, 193.
- Rúp-Manjhri (Ráui), favourite wife of Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 37; her marriage with Fateh-Khán prophesied by Sháh-Álam, 37; mother of Muhammad Kálá, 89; her tomb at Ahmedábád, 89.
- Rustam, the hero of Persian chivalry, note, 235.
- Rustam Khán Rómi, a servant of Changiz Khán, fights with the Mírzas, 302; makes peace with them, 302; in the attack on Sayad Hámid, 306; killed by Mírza Ibráhím, 310; Sayad Daulat given the title of, 318.

S

- Saádalpur, Sultán Bahádur at, 171.
- Saádul-mulk, at the siege of Modásá, 12.
- Saádul-mulk, given the title of Shams Khán, 152.
- Sábarmati, royal palace on the banks of, 48; Malik Muhammad Ikhtiár to, 81.
- Sáblí, a village on the bank of the Mahí, Sultán Mohmúd Begda spends the month of Ramazán at, 76.
- Sádát Khán, Sayad Mahmúd Bukhári, refuses the grant of Batwa, 149; the title of Abdur Rehmán, 276; officer of Sayad Hámid, attacks Ibráhím Husein, 307.
- Sádhú (Tánk) brother of Saháran, entertains Fírúz Khán, 2; his sister married to Fírúz Khán, 2; becomes a Musalmán, 3; is favoured by Sultán Fírúz, 3.
- Sádhú Náyak, a follower of Álam Khán, release Safdar Khán, the brother of his master from confinement, 232, 233.
- Sádra, the situation of, 220; Álam Khán withdraws to, 220.
- Sadr Khán, in command at Mándu, 191; captured alive and killed, 191.
- Sadr Khán, appointed minister of Sultán Ahmed II. by the nobles, 264.
- Sadr Khán Zubairi, chief of the army of Imád-ul-mulk, slain in the battle near Pátri, 211.
- Safdar Khán, appointed to the thánédári of Deolah, 96; goes to Parántej after the battle of Ahmednagar, 109, 110; reported dead, 110; at the village of Rúpál, 111; given the title of Álam Khán, 152.
- Safdar Khán, son of Álam Khán, 165.
- Safdar Khán, brother of Álam Khán, is exchanged for the family of his brother, 232.
- Sagrám Wádhel, the Rájah of Jagat, 326; his attempted treachery, 327.
- Saháran (Tánk) ruler of Gujarát, 1; his lineage, 1; the first of the ancestors of the Gujarát Sultáns to embrace Islám, 1; brother of Sádhu, 2; entertains Fírúz Khán, 2; his sister married to Fírúz, 2; entitled Wajih-ul-mulk, 3; becomes a Musalmán, 3; and is favoured by Sultán Fírúz, 3.
- Sakta, a converted Firangi, entitled Firang Khán (q. v.), 198; see Mesquita.
- Sáláhan, ancestor of Saháran, 1.
- Sálár, his son Táj Khán (q. v.), 59.
- Sáleh Muhammad Aláh diya, an attendant of Álam Khán, and the slayer of Charji, in battle with the men of Sultán Mohmúd III., 228.
- Sáleh Muhammad, Sayad, known as Sayad Chavji, a descendant of Kutbi Álam, 240.
- Sámak, Háji, Broach in charge of, 320; killed by Nafr, 321.
- Sámal, Prathiráj Rája of Dungarpur, meets Sultán Bahádur at, 164.
- Sámbal, Bahádursháh at, 166.
- Sámbar, Zafar Khán's campaign against (A. D. 1895), 6; a town 41 miles north-east of Ajmer, 33; note, Gujarát army in the neighbourhood of, 33.
- Sami, given to Sayad Hámid, 312; note.

- Bāngá Rānā, Malik Ayāz sent against, 88; supports Rātmal, in Ídar, 97; of Chittaur, 97, 115; sides with Medāni Rāi against Sultān Musaffar II., 101; but is defeated (A. D. 1518), 101; takes Medāni Rāi to Chittaur, 106; flees to Chittaur, 106; Sultān Mehmūd Khilji, being wounded, falls into the hands of (A. D. 1520), 106; withdraws to Chittaur on the approach of Gujarāt army, 106; takes Sultān Mehmūd Khilji to Chittaur (A. D. 1520), 107; keeps his son as a hostage, 107; invades Dhār (A. D. 1524), 107; defeats Mubāríz Khān near Ahmodnagar and sacks it, 110; spares Brahmins of Wadnagar, 110; sacks the town of Visalnagar, 110; returns to Chittaur, 110; Sultān Musaffar II.'s expedition against, 112; encamps at Nadisl, 113; asks pardon of Malik Ayāz and makes peace with him, 113; sends tribute by his son to Sultān Musaffar II. (A. D. 1521), 114; Bahādur Khān entertained by, 115, 140; Imād-ul-Mulk seeks his assistance against Bahādur Khān, 149; sends his son to Sultān Bahādur, 158; his brother Prathirāj becomes a vassal of Sultān Bahādur, 162.
- Banjān (St. John) ceded to the Portuguese by Changíz Khān, 286.
- Bankal Koth (or the chain Bastion) built by Malik Ayāz, 84; falls into the hands of the Portuguese, 84; Firangi General anchors his fleet off, 201.
- Bankheda, Sultān Ahmed I. takes, builds a fort at, and establishes Islām in (A. D. 1418), 17; Malik Bahā-ul-Mulk appointed to the thānedāri of (A. D. 1471), 59.
- Bankhodwārā, pirates of, capture Maulānā Mehmūd Samarkand, 60, 61; island of, 61; famous for Hīndu worship, 61; conquered by Sultān Mehmūd Begda (A. D. 1473), 61, 62, 63; Sultān Mehmūd Begda builds a mosque at, 63; left in charge of Malik Tughā, 63.
- Banvas, Sikandar Khān, governor of the province of, 200.
- Sarandās Khān, of Māndu, plunders the baggage of Mubārak Shāh's army, 276.
- Sārang Khān, brother of Ikbāl Khān, commander of Multān, 7; besieged by Mirza Muhammad Moghal, 7.
- Sārang Malik, see Kiwām-ul-Mulk.
- Sārangpūr, Sultān Ahmed besieges (A. D. 1421), 18; battle between Sultān Ahmed and Sultān Hoshang near (A. D. 1422), 18, 19; Sultān Hoshang takes shelter in the fort of, 19; a town under Mālwā 50 kos from Māndu, 101; Rānā Bāngā marches to, 50; Bahādur Shāh gives, to Mallu Khān, 171; Sultān Bahādur at, 177.
- Sārangpūr, Suburb east of Ahmedābād, founded by Malik Sārang, 48, 89.
- Sarkhej, tomb of Sheikh Ahmed Khatṭā at, 63; 64; Sultān Mehmūd Begda visits, 63, 64, 78; Sultān Mehmūd Begda buried at (A. D. 1511), 78.
- Sarwar, a river, Nāsir-ud-dīn and Muizzudīn encamp on the banks of, 259.
- Satārsāl, Rājā of Jhālāwār in revolt against Sultān Ahmed (A.D. 1414-1415), 13; repulsed and driven into Sorath, 14.
- Satwās, Sikandar Khān, the Governor of, 202.
- Sayadpūr, a place in the vicinity of Mehmudābād, 270; populated by Sayad Mubārak, 270; Sayad Mubārak at, 270.
- Seif Khān, sent to report on Dilawara, 97.
- Seif Khān, the title given to Malik Tughlak, 152.
- Selfuddīn, accomplice of Imād-ul-Mulk, in the murder of Sultān Sikandar, executed by Bahādur Khān's order.
- Self-ul-Mulk, title of Maulāna Khizr, 44.
- Shaābān, Malik, Imād-ul-mulk, originally a slave of Sultān Ahmed, sent against Sultān Hoshang, 13; plunders Mālwā, 14; fails to reduce the fort of Abū, 34; takes active measures against Rānā Kūmbhā, 35; conspiracy against him; 43; retires to the Baghl Shaābān, 87; his character, 87.
- Shād Khān, sent by Medāni Rāi to hold Māndu, 100; killed in the siege of Māndu, 101.
- Shahāb-ud-dīn, son of Malik Shaābān Imād-ul-mulk, 43.
- Shahāb-ud-dīn Ahmed Khān, made viceroy of Gujarāt (A. D. 1577), 314; goes to Dehli but is persuaded to return to Ahmedābād, 315, 316; defeated by the Mughals, 317; sent to Broach, 321; appointed fief holder of Mālwā, 321.
- Shahbās Khān Kambo, a nobleman of Akbar, 310; note.
- Shāh Alam, Bībī Mīrghī his wife, 38; his prediction concerning Fateh Khān, 39; his wife Bībī Mughlī's love for him, 39; converts Rāo Mandlik, 58; dies (A. D. 1475), 63; his mode of living, 71; story of him, the Kāsi, and the goldsmith, 70, 71, 72; intimacy with Malik Abdul Latif, 82; his tomb at Rasul-ābād, 88; built by Tāj Khān Tariāni, 88; appears to Sultān Sikandar in a vision, 142.

- Sháh Budha, Sayad Mehmúd (q. v.), so called, 140; son of Sháh Sheikhji Bukhári, chief of the Sayads of Batwa, his hatred and misunderstanding against Sultán Sikandar, 148, 149.
- Sháh Malik, father of Khatri and the son of Has-bul-Mulk, joins rebellion against Sultán Ahmed I, 11.
- Sháhpur, Batteries of Sultán Bahádur at, 166.
- Sháháji, uncle of Sultán Ahmed II, placed on the throne of Gujarát by some nobles, 268; being defeated flees, 270.
- Sháistah Khán, the title given to Asad-ul-mulk, 152.
- Shamsher-ul-Mulk, with expedition against Ajmere, 180; Governor of Chittaur, march of, to Gujarát to help Bahádur, 197; brother of Fattáji Muháfiz Khán, 220; at the battle of Dáhor, 219, 220.
- Shamsher-ul-Mulk Doláji, commander in the army of Násir-ul-Mulk, 267; in battle with Sayad Mubárák, 267; wounded in it, 267.
- Shams Khán, son of Fírúz Khán, the ruler of Nágor, expelled from Nágor, 33; attacks Nágor, 33; Rána Kumbhá reinstates him in Nágor, 33; seeks aid from Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 34; gives his daughter in marriage to Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 34; put to death by Sultán Kutb-ud-dín's nobles, 40; his daughter said to have poisoned Sultán Kutb-ud-dín, 40.
- Shams Khán, the title of Saád-ul-Mulk, 152.
- Shams Khán, given the title of Daryá Khán, 152.
- Shams Khán Dandáni, appointed cup-bearer to Fírúz Sháh, 4; refuses the kingdom of Gujarát, 8; made governor of Nágor, 8; battle with Rána Mokal, Rájá of Chittaur, 13; his teeth, 13; gives shelter to Masti Khán and Muid-ud-dín, 13; invited to join the confederacy against Sultán Ahmed, but reveals the plot, 15.
- Shamsuddín Malik, has charge of Mehmúd Khán and Mubárák Khán, 206; makes over Prince Mehmúd Khán to Mukbil Khán, 207.
- Shamsuddín (Altmash), Sultán of Dehli, converted district of Bhika to Islám, 171.
- Sharfuddín, Sayad, nephew of Sháh Abú Turáb, killed in battle, 325.
- Sharif Khán, comes to assist Khán Khánán from Málwa, 325; sent against Broach, 321.
- Shark, Malik (ush), the title of Malik Shaábán (q. v.), 87.
- Shark, Malik, escorts the Persian envoy in Gujarát, 92.
- Sharzah Khán, (Malik Latíf) sent against Latíf Khán, his defeat and death, 142.
- Sharzah Khán, with the son of Sultán Mehmúd Khilji, ravages the territories of Chittaur, 165.
- Sharzat-ul-Mulk, captured in the battle near Pátri, 211.
- Sheikhan, son of Kabír, killed by Dngarsi, the minister of Ráwal Patál, 67.
- Sheikhan Utheria or Malik Sajan, one of the troopers of Sultán Muzaffar II., became a martyr, 108.
- Sheikhji, Malik, titled Táid-ul-Mulk, 92.
- Sheikhji Sháh Sayad, Badrul-Árifín Hazrat, son of Sayad Muhammad, anecdote of, 90; his influence on Sultán Muzaffar II, 120; goes to Chámpáner, 133; offended by Sultán Muzaffar II, 133, 134; Saint, devotion in respect of Bahádur Khán, 134, 135; reconciled with Sultán Muzaffar II, 135; Sultán Muzaffar II. requests for the throne for Sikandar Khán, 136, 137; foretells the fate of Sultán Bahádur, 138, 139; allows Bahádur Khán to go to Hindustán, 139; dies (A. D. 1524), 140; Sayad Jalál Bukhári so called, 140; son of Sayad Mehmúd and grandson of Kutbi-Álam, 140; Míán, grandson of Lord Kutbi Aktáb, the prophesy of, 141; Saint, the tomb of grandson of Kutb-ul-Aktáb, 177.
- Sheikhji Tamim, Malik Asad-ul-Mulk known as, 122.
- Sheikh Malik, nicknamed Masti Khán, 11; son of Sultán Muzaffar, governor of Surat and Bander, Sultán Muzaffar's advice respecting, 21; joins rebellion against Sultán Ahmed, 22; flees to Nágor, 13; son of Sher Malik, the rebellion of (A. D. 1414), 13; driven into Sorath, 14.
- Sheikh-ul-Islám, a Bukhári, is offered a title but does not accept it, 276.

Sher Andáz Khán, the title given to Malik Mustufá, 152.

Sher Khán, the chief of the Fauládi Patháns, 253; the districts of Pattan given to, 270; Alam Khán joins, 276; seizes Kadi, 276; being defeated returns to Pattan, 276; unites with Alam Khán, 276; in conspiracy with Tatar Khán, 287; I'timád Khán's revenge on, 289, 290; goes to Ahmedábád and seats Sultán Muzaffar on the throne 303; harassed by Ibráhím Husein, 304; joins Muhammad Husein and Muhammad Khán, 311; defeated near Pattan by the nobles of Akbar, 311; goes to Sorath, 311; his son Muhammad Khán, 311; son of I'timád Khán, 315; left in charge of Ahmedábád, 315

Sher Khán Sár, Afghán, afterwards Sher Sháh (q. v.), his rising in Bihár and Jaunpúr, 197.

Sher Malik, given the title of Nasrat-ul-Mulk, 152.

Sherpúr, Muhammad Sháh, son of Fírúz Sháh, flees to, 4.

Sher Sayad, gives news of the murder of Sultán Sikandar to Bahádur Khán, 150.

Sher Sháh Sár, the Afghán King of Dehli, 236; Laryá Khán and Alam Khán flee to, 236; Pádasháh of Dehli, Alam Khán Lodi and Daryá Khán go to, 271; bestows on them estates in Málwá, 271.

Shirwáni, army of, tribe kept up by Sayad Mubárah, 254.

Shirwán Khán Bhatti, adopted son of Afzal Khán, 249; kills Burhán, the murderer of Mehmód III (A. D. 1554), 250.

Shudani, one of Sultán Kutb-ud-dín's elephants so named, 30; in battle against Sultán Mehmód Khilji, 30, 32.

Shuját Khán, a noble and companion of Bahádur, 147, 148; sees the beautiful Názukleher, 147, 148; (Haji Muhammad) goes to Latif Khán, 156; attendant of Sultán Bahádur and killed by the Firangis (A. D. 1536), 199, 200.

Shujá-át Khán, Malikji, the death of, proposed to Sultán Mehmód III, by Charji, 222; and consequently hanged, 222.

Shujá-ul-Mulk, brother of Alam Khán, jokes with Mujáhid Khán Behlím, 225; avenged of his joke, 226, 227, 228.

Sidhpúr, the situation of, 14; Sultán Ahmed's expedition against the temple of (A. D. 1416), 14.

Sikandar, son of Bahlól Lodi, Sultán, contemporary of Mehmód Begda, 46; assists Sultán Muhammad Khilji, 96; dies (A. D. 1517), 100; Sultán Alam Lodi, a relative of, 176.

Sikandar Khán, son of Sultán Muhammad, grandson of Sultán Ahmed, in battle near Kapadwanj, 31.

Sikandar Khán, son of Prince Khalíl Khán and grandson of Sultán Mehmód Begda, accompanies his father to Baroda, 77; Prince, sent to Muhammadábád from Godhra, 96; Bibi Ráni, the mother of, dies (A. D. 1523), 114 the revenues of the Jágir of, 115, 116; Sultán Muzaffar II's advice to, 117; son of Sultán Muzaffar II, 136; and Bibi Ráni, 136; appointed heir apparent, 136, 137; commended to Sheikhji, 137; envies Bahádur Khán, 139; determines to kill him, 139; at Muhammadábád, his bounties, succeeds his father on the throne of Gujarát (A. D. 1526) as Sultán Sikandar, 141.

Sikandar Khán, ruler of Sinwás hostility of Sultán Mehmód Khilji to, 165; takes refuge with the Ráná of Chittaur, 165; waits on Sultán Bahádur, 165; accompanies the Sultán into Málwá, 165; present at the siege of Chittaur, 179; attendant of Bahádur and killed by Firangis, 200; Governor of Satwás and under Sultán Bahádur, 202.

Sikandar, Sultán, ascends the throne of Gujarát (A. D. 1526), 141; sees his fate in a dream, 142; invests Malik Latif with the title of Shirzah Khán, and sends him to expell Latif Khán, 141, 142; murdered by Imád-ul-Mulk, 143; his Portuguese mirror, 143; buried at Hálol (A. D. 1526), 144; his beauty, 142, 148; his generosity, 146; his concubine Názukleher, 147; his misunderstanding with Bahádur Sháh, 148, 149; withdrawal of the grant of Batwá from Sayads, bestowal of the same on Sadát Khán, 149; his murder avenged, 155.

Siladhi, Rajpút, comes to see Malik Ayáz, 113; is lured by Modáni Rái to the Ráná of Chittaur, 113; ruler of Raisen, Sultán Mehmód Khilji's hostility to, 165; takes refuge with Rájá Ratansi, 165; received by Sultán Bahádur, 165; Sultán Bahádur's gifts to, 165; accompanies the Sultán into Málwá, 165; leaves Sultán Bahádur, 165; favours bestowed on, by the Sultán, 170; refuses to appear at Court, 170; awaits on the

- Sultán; 170; is made prisoner at Naálchah (A. D. 1531), 171; becomes a Musalmán, 172; his duplicity at the siege of Ráisen, 172, 174; recalled from Mándu, 174; his brother Lakhmansén, 174; Juhár performed by the women of, 174, 175; and is named Sáláh-ud-dín, 175; his women, 175; his Bhúpat, 175; is defeated (1531), 175, 176; his expenditure on women, 176; the territories in his possession, 176.
- Sindh, Sultán Mehmád Begdá's incursion into (A. D. 1471), 59; another expedition into (A. D. 1472), 60; Behráh Khán, a Prince of (A. D. 1536), 208.
- Singár Mandap-palace, Sultán Bahádúr convenes the nobles and gives them dresses of honour, etc., on his accession, 152.
- Singárgáon, Bahádúr Khán at, 151.
- Singdulan, one of the best elephants of Mubárah Sháh, 211; falls into the hands of Sultán Mehmád III, 211.
- Simvás, Sikandar Khán, the governor of, 165.
- Siráj-ud-dín, Sheikh, his adventure with Sultán Mehmád Begdá, 48, 49.
- Sir Olive Bayley's history of Gujarát, references to, 4, 21, 24, 34, 35, 46, 52, 76, 91, 94, 213, 219, 235.
- Sirohi, Rájá of, plunders merchants on road to Gujarát, 72; Sultán Mehmád Begdá's campaign against, 73; asks pardon of the Sultán, 73; Ráná Bángá encamps at, 167; Girásías Chiefs of, reduced by Sultán Mehmád III, 239.
- Síva Vádhel, a landowner of Bot, 326 note; helps Sultán Muzaffar III, 326; fights with the viceroy's men but is killed, 326.
- Sodhás, tribe of, in Sindh, 60.
- Somnáth, temples of, destroyed by Zafar Khán, and Islám introduced (A. D. 1394), 6; another expedition against, and Islám firmly established (A. D. 1398-99), 7.
- Sondha, Malik, door-keeper of Sultán Sikandar, 143.
- Songad Chittauri, Sultán Bahádúr conquers fort of (1529-30), 167.
- Sorath, a Taluká of Mandlik, Rájá of Gírnár, 14; expedition of Sultán Ahmed against (A. D. 1415), 14, a ri-ing, against Sultán Ahmed, I, 16; Sultán Mehmád Begdá's campaign against, 52; 53; description of the country of 53; incharge of Prince Khalil Khán, 72; Malik Ayás, governor of, 111; Hindu chiefs of, instigate revolt against Sultán Bahádúr, 157; Imád-ul-Mulk at, 204; Sultán Mehmud III born in (A. D. 1525), 208; province of, 220.
- Sója, a Bantá, minister of Changíz Khán, 295.
- Sulaimán Afghán, the rebellion of, 1414), 13.
- Sulemán, son of Mujáhid-ul-Mulk, given the title of Mansúr Khán, 152.
- Suljápúr, a village, the situation of, 286; I'timád Khán at, 286.
- Sultánábád, its origin, 18.
- Sultánpur a dependency of Gujarát, 6; invaded by Ádil Khán, 6; Sultán Ahmed marches against Naásir Khán in, 15, 16; rebellion suppressed, 16; Prince Latíf Khán takes shelter in, 141; and Nazarbár, given to Mubárah Sháh, 278.
- Sultán Sháh, killed in the battle of Ahmednagar, 109.
- Sumrás, tribe of, in Sindh, 60.
- Súr, minister of Ráwal Patáí, Rájá of Ohámpáner, 66; sent to Sultán Ghiás-ud-dín Mahmúd Khiljí, 66.
- Súrat, Sheikh Malik, governor of, 11; Sultán Bahádúr visits Súrat and Ránder, and marches thence in a day and night to Chámpáner, 159; Fattóji imprisoned in the fort of, Imád-ul-Mulk made fief-holder of 222; the castle of, falls into the hands of the Mirzas, 302; the revenues of, 302 note; battle of, between Akbar and Hamzabán, 311; Quiltí Muhammad Khán, as the deputy of Akbar, at, 311.

T

- Tabakát-i-Akbari, references to, 10, 76, 83, 92.
- Tágan, ancestor of Saháran, 1.
- Táhir, Sháh, Dakhani, comes to Sultán Bahádúr on the part of Nizám-ul-Mulk, 108.
- Táhir, Muhammad, Sayad, a Saint and descendant of Kutbi Álam, 240.

Táhir, Sháh, the spiritual follower of Sultán Muzaffar II., 117 ; his tomb at Baroda, 117.

Táid-ul-Mulk, the title of Malik Sheikhji, 91, 92.

Táj Khán Tariáni-builder of the shrine of the Lord Sháh Álam, the king of Saints ; refuses to acknowledge Mehmúd Sháh, 145 ; at Dhandhúka, 149 ; leaving Dhandhúka, joins Sultán Bahádúr at Dungarpúr, 150 ; refuses to join Prince Latífkhán, 150 ; does homage to Bahádúr Khán, at Nehrwalá, 151 ; is given a robe of honour by Sultán Bahádúr, 152 ; Bahádúr Sháh sends after Imádul Mulk, 154 ; plunders the house of Imád-ul-Mulk, 154 ; appointment to the Ministry (1525 A. D.), 156 ; made Sultán Bahádúr's Minister, 156 ; successful expedition of, against Ráisingh, Rájá of Pál, 157 ; lays waste the country of Pál, 157.

áj Khán, at the battle of Dáhor, 220.

Táj Khán, Malik, given the title of Wajih-ul-Mulk, 152.

Táj-ud-dín Suyúti, Mauláná, Sultán Mehmúd Begdá's last visit to, 78.

Talájá, town of, Sultán Bahádúr at, 158.

Tamím Ansári, Behráam Khán, a descendant of, 208.

Tánk, meaning of the word, 1 ; dynasty of, the Kingdom of Gujarát bestowed upon, by Saint Makhdúm Jaháníán, 3.

Tánkah, ₹ of a rupee, 262, note.

Tánks, a class of Rajpúts of the Súrjavansí race (note 1.) expelled from caste for wine drinking, 1.

Tapti, Sultán Mahmúd Begdá's army reaches the banks of, 75.

Tarak Bandar, the Firangi General comes to, 201.

Tarápúr Gate, of Mándu, 18.

Táríkh-i-Bahádúr Sháhí, Muháfiz Khán, grand-father of the Author of, 59 ; with Sultán Muzaffar II during the campaign against Málwa, 97 ; the author of, sent by Kiwám-ul-Mulk to fetch Mubáriz-ul-Mulk, to Walád, 111 ; sends a message to Táj Khán, 149 ; with Sultán Bahádúr, 151 ; ordered by Sultán Bahádúr to bring elephants to the Darbár, 152 ; ordered by Sultán Bahádúr to send for Táj Khán, 155 ; as the Dároghah, Superintendent, of a department in Cambay, joins the army of Sultán Bahádúr, 160 ; with Sultán Bahádúr in the expedition against Mándú, 166 ; with the army of Sultán Bahádúr in the siege of Chittaur, 178 ; references to 26, 27, 40, 57, 97, 99, 111, 112, 116, 142, 149, 151, 152, 155, 160, 166, 178 ; 179.

Tátár Khán, son of Zafar Khán, hostage for his father, 5 ; his son Ahméd Khán born (A. D. 1391), 5 ; adopted as son by Sultán Muhammad Tughlak, 5 ; joins his father Zafar Khán in Gujarát, 7 ; leaves Pánapat and invests Dehli, 5 ; proposes to take Dehli, 7 ; his father bestows on him the Kingdom of Gujarát, 8 ; is entitled Sultán Muhammad, 8 ; his conduct towards his father, 8 ; his ambitious designs, 8 ;

Tátár Khán Ghorí, I'timád Khán bestows Sorath on, 270 ; called from Junágadh, 285 - conspires against I'timád Khán, 287 ; displeases I'timád Khán, 291 ; flees to Sán and, 291 ; at Ránpur, 292.

Tátár Khán Lodi, son of Aláudín, son of Sultán Bahlól Lodi, a General of Bahádúr, sent to attack Chittaur (1532 A. D.), 178-179 ; sent against Dehli as Bahádúr's General, 186 ; defeated and killed at Biyána by Mírza Hindál (1534 A. D.), 186.

Tásé, or the Peacock, a favourite horse of Sultán Mehmúd III bestowed on Miýán Manjúh by Sayad Mubárák, 262.

Thálner, port of, Nasír Khán besieges (A. D. 1417), 15 ; Nasír Khán at, 16 ; conquered by Imád-ul-Mulk (A. D. 1499), 75, sultán Mehmúd Begda at, 75.

Thattah-in-Sindh, Sultán Muhammad Tughlak goes to, 4.

Timúr Gúrgán, Amír (Tamerlane) orders Mírza Mughal to lead an army to India, 7 ; Sultán Firúz Tughlak flees to Gujarát from, 7 ; his indifferences with Ildarim Bayazid (Bajazet), the Sultán of Rum, 182 ; Fara Yúsuf Turkoman and Sultán Ahmad Jaldir flee before, 182 ; dies (A. D. 1404), 8.

Tir-polia Gate, the modern Tín Darwázah, a famous quarter of Ahmedábád, 268.

Trilok, one of the ancestors of Saháran, 1.

Trimbakdás, Rájá of Chámpáner, conspires against Sultán Ahmed, 15 ; submits to the Sultán, 16 ; the Sultán's intended campaign against, 17.

- Tūghā, Malik, created Farbat-ul-Mulk, 44 ; has charge of Sānkhodwār and Jagat, 63.
 Tūghā-Malik, son of Malik Ayās, 158 ; waits on Sultān Bahādur, at Dīv, 158 ; Bahādur entrusts Dīv to (A. D. 1529), 164 ; his treatment of Shāh Tāhir, ancient customs duties on the merchants of Khurāsān, 169.
 Taghlak Khān, a prince of Sindh, at the storming of the Mahailah defile near Jónāgadh (A. D. 1467), 54.
 Taghlak Khān, the title of Maudūd-ul-Mulk, 152.
 Taghlak Khān, an Officer of Sultān Bahādur, attacks Is-hāk and is defeated near the Rann, 158.
 Taghlak Khān, a follower of I'timād Khān, 277 ; killed by certain Abyssinians, 277.
 Taghlak, Malik, given the title of Seif Khān, 152.
Tuhfat-us Sūdāt, the history of, written by Ārām, the Kashmīrean, 236.
 Turks, an army of, kept up by Imād-ul-Mulk, 254.
Tāẓ Nāmāh, a famous work of imagination in Persian, 190 note.

U

- Ugra-sen, sent by Medāni Rāi to defend Māndu, 100.
 Ujjain, battle between Sultān Ahmed and Sultān Hoshang near, 18 ; the city of, centre of Mālwa, 18 ; occupied by Sultān Ahmed (A. D. 1421), 18 ; Medāni Rāi flees to, 100 ; fighting between Sultān Mehmūd Khilji and the Rānā of Chittaur near, 105 ; given to Silahdī the Rajpūt, 170 ; in charge of Bhūpat Rāi, 170 ; given in fief to Darayā Khān of Māndu, 171 ; Mehmūd Shāh Fārūki encamps at, 198, 202.
 Uklesar, (Ankleshvar), its situation, 231 ; Alp Khān at, 231.
 Umar Ibnal Khatīb, the second Khalīfah (A. D. 634-643), 257 note.
 Umar Khān Afghān, of Lodī tribe, flying from Humāyūn, takes refuge with Sultān Bahādur, 164.
 Ūnah, Shāh Shamsuddin Bukhārī buried near, 57 ; a town twelve miles from Dīv, 203 ; Mīrza Muhammad Zamān at, 203.
 Usmān Ahmed Sarkhez, the rebellion of (A. D. 1414), 13.
 Usmānpur, a village in the North-West of Ahmedābād, 240 ; founded by Sayad Usmān 240.
 Usmān, Sayad, a deputy of Kutb-ul-Aktāb, 240 ; entitled Sham-i-Burhāni, 240.

V

- Vikramājīt, son of Sānga, the Rānā of Chittaur, sent with presents by his father to Sultān Bahādur, 158.
 Vikramājīt, infant King of Mālwa, son of Rānā Sangh agrees to give (1532 A. D.) ten millions of tānkās, a hundred horses and ten elephants to and makes peace with Sultān Bahādur, 179.
 Virāngām, town in the district of Jhālāwār, 168.
 Virāmpūr, the wicket of, Darayā Khān breaks open, 220.
 Visalnagar, the town of, sacked by the Rānā of Chittaur, 110.

W

- Wabālpūr, fifteen kōs from Māndu, Ādil Khān of Asir at, 106.
 Wadhvān, town in the district of Jhālāwār, 168.
 Wadnagar, the town of, intended plunder of, by the Rānā of Chittaur, 110 ; its inhabitants, 110 ; the Author of Tārikh-i-Bahādur-Shāhī at, his message to Tāj Khān at Dhandhuka ; 149-50.
 Wāgad, Sultān Bahādur stays at, with his army, 159.
 Wajih-ul-Mulk, title of Malik Tāj Khān, 153.
 Wajih-ul-Mulk overthrows Sultān Ahmed II, 288 ; sent by I'timād Khān to fetch Mīrza Ibrāhīm Hussein with jewels, 303, 304.
 Wajih-ul-Mulk, Tank, first Muhammadan ruler of Gujarāt, 1 ; originally a Hindū named Sahāran (q. v.) 1 ; his son Zaffar Khān Nāsim of Gujarāt, 1.

Wajih-ul-Mulk Tank, story of him and Darya Khan, 214, 215; retires to his estate, 215; sef holder of Jhalawar, 219; meets Sultan Mehmud III, 219; at the battle of Dahor, 220; keeps Sultan Mehmud III in confinement, 225; conspires for the death of the Sultan, 225, 226; the house of, plundered, 230.

Walad, the village of, seven kos from Ahmedabad Kiwam-ul-Mulk encamps at, 110.

Wasawar, Sultan Bahadur at, 158.

Watrak, River, the situation of, 65; highway robberies near, 65; Mehmudabad founded on the bank of, 65.

Wazir Khan, Dholka given to, 313; appointed against Amin Khan Ghor, 313; goes to Agra, 313; appointed Viceroy of Gujarat, (A. D. 1574, 75), 313.

Witthal, a Wania, the minister of Rao Mandlik, 56; faithlessness of, 56; his wife Mohini taken by Rao Mandlik, 57; his revenge, 57.

Y

Yadgar Nasir Mirza, in charge of Pattan for Emperor Humayun, 197.

Yasir Suwari, Sheikh, a schismatic, brought before Sultan Bahadur, 201; condemned to death by him for not repeating the creed, 202.

Yusuf Khan Habshi, given the title of Aizam Humayun, 276.

Yusuf Malik, brother of Malik Alam Shah, entitled Saif Khan, 77.

Yusuf Malik, a son of Lutfullah joins Sultan Bahadur at Muhammadnagar, 151.

Yusuf, Sheikh, brother of the author of this history, 237.

Z

Zafar Khan, the first Viceroy of Gujarat, 1; pleases a saint who in return bestows on him the kingdom of Gujarat for his good deeds, 3; made cup-bearer to Firuz Shah, 4; sent against Rasti Khan, 5; at Pattan, 5; his letter to Rasti Khan, 5; defeats Rasti Khan at Kambhoi, 5; founds Jitpur, 5; pacifies Gujarat (A. D. 1393), 5; suppresses a rebellion in Idar, 5; designs to destroy the temple of Somnath, 5; repels invasion of Gujarat by Adil Khan, 5; his campaign against Jahrand (Junagadh), 5; destroys the temple of Somnath, 5; and introduces Islam in Somnath Pattan, 5; his campaign against Mandu, 5; his pilgrimage to Ajmere, 5; his campaign against Sambhar and Dandwana, 5; his campaign against Delwarah and Jalwarah, 5; his campaign against Idar, 7; suppresses a rebellion in Somnath 7; Sultan Mahmud of Delhi seeks aid from, 7; places Tatar Khan on the throne of Gujarat and retires into private life, 8; said to have caused his son's death, 8; resumes the Government of Gujarat, 8; makes Shams Khan, governor of Nagor, 8; appoints his successor, 8; prepares to assist Sultan Mahmud against Ikbāl Khan, 9; assumes regal power in Gujarat with the title of Muzaffar Shah (q. v.), 8; son of Wajih-ul-Mulk, 13.

Zahir-ud-din Muhammad Babar, Padshah of Cabul, 115; Sultan Ala-ud-din flees to the court of, 115; persuaded to invade Hindustan by Sultan Ala-ud-din, 115.

Zein Khan, Kokah, the son of Ikhtiyar-ul-Mulk, 305.

Zein-ud-din, brother of Afzal Khan, imprisoned by Nasir-ul-Mulk, 264.

Zein-ud-din Kambo, killed by the order of Sultan Muzaffar, 319.

ERRATA AND ADDENDA.

For the word Delhi read Dehli, page 1, lines 16, 18, 21 ; page 5, lines 12, 13, 18; page 7, lines 2, 6, 15, 32 ; page 8, lines 7, 14 ; page 9, lines 5, 28, page 100, para. 3, line 10; page 149, para. 1, line 2 ; page 54, para. 2, line 4; page 186, para. 1, line 11; page 187, para. 1, line 3; page 190 para. 3, line 2.

Page 2, para. 1, line 4, for art read arts.

„ 4 „ 1, „ 2 „ 747 „ 749

„ 4 „ 1 „ 2 „ 1345 „ 1348

To note 1, p. 4, add : Bayley's MS. gives A. H. 749, as the date of Mohamad Tughlak's death but gives the real date to be H. 752 (A. D. 1351) and this is correct. See Bayley's Gujarát 71 and note 4, p. 71.

At page 5, line 1, for Sherpura read Sher-púr.

At page 13, line 2, read Saád-ul-mulk for Saád-ul-mul. Line 14 Saád-ul-mulk, for Sáád-ul-mulk.

At page 13, line 3, para. 3, for Ajgán read Ajghán.

At page 13, line 19, read Dandáni for Dandani.

At page 13, line 30, for Sátarsál, read Satarsál.

At page 15, line 32, for Nasir read Nasír.

At page 15, line 19, for Sháims Khán read Shamskhán.

Page 16, line 15, after agents read to instead of in.

Page 16, line 23, read drawing for pulling.

At page 25, line 17, the words prayers and are superfluous.

At page 26, line 17, for ruler read rule, line 35 read Kuráan for Kurán. Also at page 32, line 18.

At page 20, line 18, instead of be lasting read last.

At page 22, para. 1, last line, for strived read strove.

At page 22, line 1, para. 2, for having read he had.

At page 22, line 13, para. 2, for of read with.

At page 23, line 1, para. 1, of the opening chapter for of read after.

At page 27, line 2, for Palri read Pálri, line 9, for would read could.

At page 28, line 4, the word he is superfluous ; line 16, the word kind is superfluous ; line 23, delete com after grain and add the words of corn.

At page 29, Note 2, for meohed read Mash-had.

At 30, para 3, line 6, for Imád-ud-din read Alá-ud din.

At page 31, line 30, for their read his.

At page 32, line 15, for safur read Safar.

- Page 58, para. 2, line 1, for Janágad spell Júnágadh ; line 16, for ommand write command.
- Page 61, line 28, for Mehamúd Sháhi read Mehmúd Sháhi.
- Page 62, para. 2, line 15, for Musalmán read *Musalmán*s.
- Page 65, para. 2, line 1, for Junágad spell Júnágadh.
line 6, between the words of and chief insert the.
- Page 66, para. 2, line 6, between and and dagger read the.
- Page 67, para. 2, line 9, for paper read sheet.
- Page 68, para. 1, line 21, for chamli read chameli.
- Page 68, para. 1, line 23, for Borsal read Borsali.
- Page 68, para. 1, line 32, after Chámpáner insert which.
- Page 75, para. 2, line 2, for Fárukhi read Fáruhi.
- Page 75, para. 4, line 1, for Chauls read Chaul.
- Page 79, para. 2, lines 13, 14, 16, twice in line 19, 21, 26, 28, 35, read Mulla for Mullah.
- Page 79, para. 2, line 34, read way for why.
- Page 80, para. 1, line 6, for valuable read valuables.
- Page 83, para. 1, line 2, between Masúid and his insert for.
- Page 83, para. 2, line 3, for hi read his.
- Page 84, para. 2, line 17, for of read over.
- Page 85, para. 2, line 17, Misprint.
- Page 92, Note 1, for Yálgar Beg spell Yálgár Beg.
- Page 96, para. 1, line 8, for of write for.
- Page 99, para. 1, line 21, insert a, after the words God willing.
- Page 105, para. 3 line 1, for Muzaffár read Muzaffar.
5, delete the word thus between master and they.
- Page 106, para. 2, line 23, delete and between fatigues and after.
- Page 115, para. 2, line 8 for mustin read Muslim.
11, for wha read what.
12, for ou read one.
- Page 116, para. 3, line 10, for tanzi read tanzil 14, for the read that.
- Page 117, para. 1, line 25, for nd read and.
- Page 118, para. 1, line 8, delete the after night.
para. 1. line 9, after Sultán insert Mehmúd Begda.
- Page 125, para. 1, line 3, for Mullahs spell Mullas.
line 7 for Mullahs spell Mullás.
- Page 129, Note 1, line 2, reverse the â in âmal.
- Page 131 para. 2, line 12. for Mullah spell Mullá.
- Page 137-138.
- Page 139, para. 2, for Katili read Katili.
para. 2, line 10, for Delhi read Dehli.
para. 4, line 2, for Delhi read Dehli.

Page 140, para. 2, line 2, for Delhi read Dehli;

para. 4, line 2, for Khān read Khān.

Page 141, para. 1, put the words the Emperor Bābar in parenthesis.

Page 141, para. 3, line 6, delete the comma after Imād-ul-Mulk.

para. 4, line 1, for Latif Khān substitute Latif Khān.

line 3, for Amirs read Amīrs.

line 4, for Shirzah read Sharzah.

line 5, for horses read horse.

Note 1, lines 2, and 3, for Rana read Rāna.

line 3, for Bhim read Bhīm.

Page 142, para. 1, line 1, for Latif read Latīf and for Shirzah read Shar
the same on line 3.

line 6, for Amirs read Amīrs.

line 11, for Katbi read Kutb-i.

line 12, for Makhḍum read Makhḍūm.

Page 142, para. 1.

line 21, for told me read communicated it to him.

para. 2, line 6, before the place inverted commas.

„ line last, delete comma after market.

Page 143, line 3, for were read had.

line 19, for Katbi read Kutb-i line 39, after in insert to.

Page 144, para. 1, line 1, delete the commas after Muḥammad and servant

para. 8, for on read at.

Page 147, para. 1, line 2, for Id read I'd.

Note 1, for Id read I'd.

Page 148, para. 2, line 2, for man or woman read men or women.

Page 151, para. 1, line 3, for horses read horse.

Page 152, para. 2, line 2, for I'd read I'd;

para. 2, line 27, for Shirzah Khan read Sharzah Khān.

Page 154, para. 5, line 11, for Kabīrrul-Mulk read Kabīr-ul-Mulk.

Page 155, para. 1, line 11, for Khush-Kadām read Khush-Kadām.

Page 156, para. 3, line 8, for Id read I'd.

Page 170, para. 1, line 3, for he read the Sultān;

line 12 delete the comma after the words Vazīr Ikhtiyār Kh para. 2, line 10, for tānkās read tānkahs.

Page 171, para. 1, line 1, for for Rabī-ul-Akhir read Rabī'-ul-A'khir;

ERRATA AND ADDENDA.

- Page 184, para. 1, line 7, delete a before conduct.
Page 184, para. 1, line 6, for have read has.)
Page 187, para. 1, line 3, note 1, line 3, read Hushang for Hu-bang.
Page 191, para. 1, line 11, for animal read bird.
para. 2, line 9, for attack read assault.
para. 2, for moreovr read moreover.
Page 192, para 2, line 16, for words read word.
Para 2, line 35, for hinder read harm.
Page 202, para. 1, read his for h.
„ „ 3, read invited for nvited.
„ read say for siad.
Page 204, para. 1, read Muhammad for Muhammád.
Page 208, in the heading of the chapter read Mehmúd III for Mehmúd.
„ new chapter line 12. The second from is redundant.
„ line 16, Mehmúd III for Mehmúd II.
Page 212, line 18, read mistake for mistak.
Page 224, line 5, the word and after came is superfluous.
Page 225, para. 3, line 6, for Majahid read Mujahid.
Page 232, para. 2, line last, for throwng read throwing.

